—Chief Constable Bell, of Lindsay, on Saturday night last while on his way home was struck on the head with a two-pound and a half rock which knocked him senseless. It is supposed some person, angered because the constable served summonses in Scott Act cases, lay in ambush and did the deed.

Personal.

Mr. M. Collins left last evening for St. Ann's, Quebec, where he will assume the position of managing book-keeper for Messrs. Flynn & Cosgrove, contractors.

Mr. E. D. Gough and family left town today, for a holiday tour in the Muskoka district. After a short stay, Mr. Gough will visit the eastern and western wholesale markets to purchase his fall and winter stock of cheap clothing.

Mr. M. Grier and sister left last night for Minneapolis to join Mr. John Fenton, the contractor of the C., B. & Q. short line railroad, now being constructed from Chicago to St. Paul, where Mr. Fenton has the contract for construction. They went by the G.T.R. and C., B. & Q.

Miss Nellie Wrighton, daughter of Mr. W. H. Wrighton, who has been attending Loretto Abbey, Toronto, and who has returned home for the holidays, has been exceedingly successful in her studies during the past term, securing the gold medal for English prose competition, crown and prize in English, French and music, and honorable mention in crayon drawing and painting. It might also be mentioned that Miss Wrighton, at the close of last year's term, secured the gold medal for French conversation and first prize in mathematics, English literature and composition. Miss Wrighton is to be congratulated on the very creditable standing she has taken in her various studies.

MONDAY, JULY 5, 1886.

THE NIGHT DANCERS OF OUR STREETS.

The recent committal of the unfortunate girl to the Mercer Reformatory for a period of four years, is a most melancholy fact, considering that the culprit, who has so rapidly graduated in vice, is only fourteen years of age. When the undue liberty and lamentable lack of parental restraint general in the dealings of parents with the children and youths of both sexes is considered, such a result is not to be wondered at. The devil's school is kept upon the streets, and if children are allowed to attend it, it is no matter of surprise that the evil lessons taught are rapidly learned. Night after night, especially in summer weather, on all our streets are to be seen young girls, at the most impressionable and critical age, wandering alone, or what is worse, in company with members of the opposite sex, who, in the majority of cases, constitute the complement of evil conditions, necessary to work the girl's ruin. That girls, as a rule, learn their first lessons in "ways that lay hold on death," upon the streets, does not admit of doubt. They are there free from parental restraint, and at every turn evil lurks, at every turn designing villains lay in wait to ensnare the unwary. The consequences are, in nine cases out of ten, such as alluded to above. The only remedy is to keep girls under the parental eye, especially at night. No girl is safe who is allowed to roam abroad at will through the streets, unless under proper guardianship, and the parents who allow such liberty are morally guilty of the moral corruption that is sure to follow and of the loss of personal virtue which results with such saddening frequency. If parents refuse to exercise a proper degree of control, the authorities sh ould step in and protect the public morals. It would be in the best interest of the class under consideration, if the police were empowered to accost girls who, they have reason to believe, are abroad without authority and in questionable company, and if they do not give satisfactory reasons for their wanderings about the streets, to bring them to the notice of the authorities. The same remarks apply in nearly all respects to boys. The materials for our roughs, and candidates for for jails and penitentiaries are made in the streets, and parents, who fail to know where and in what company their boys spend their nights, are sowing the seeds of sorrow and shame.

The Thoughtless Public.

To the Editor of THE DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of Saturday, I noticed a significant line to the effect that the Firemen's Demonstration on Dominion Day was "not a financial success." This is simply a shame. The houses of the people of Peterborough, in case of fire, are in the hands of the firemen, who do an immense amount of work during the year, without salary—only a merely nominal honorarium. Besides the Fire Brigade Band, give their delightful music free of fee and in the most liberal manner. The demonstration of the firemen was to raise money to pay for the new uniforms of the band, and yet after all their labor, trouble, and sacrifice of time, the demonstration, owing to the stinginess of the public of Peterborough, is not a financial success. The band has played at lawn church socials, on several occasions giving their services gratis. Now these churches, as well as the other churches who are under obligations to the band, who have received benefits for nothing, represent a large proportion of our population. Yet there was not enough of gratitude to ensure a paying patronage to a scheme to raise money to decently clothe the band members. It would seem that the public are willing to take all and give nothing. They come to the park in thousands and listen to the delightful music of the band for hours twice a week. Yet on the night of July 1st, the splendid exhibition of fireworks was seen and enjoyed by some who manfully paid the admission, while thousands enjoyed the scene from free seats on the Hunter street bridge and from the foot of Simcoe and Charlotte streets. This is not giving the boys a "fair shake," by any means. The public of Peterborough should be above getting so much and refusing to pay for it—at least enough to cover expenses. There is a great deal of thoughtlessness in the matter and I write this as a reminder.

Yours, etc.,
FORTISSIMO.

Police Court.

At the police court this morning Police Magistrate Dumble delivered judgment in the Darling vs. McMartin case, enlarged from Friday, in which Mrs. McMartin, of Norwood, was charged with a violation of the Scott Act. The magistrate found the defendant guilty and imposed the usual fine of $50 and costs.

Mr. L. F. Carpenter was summoned to attend the court this morning, charged by the Peterborough Water Company with carrying away three barrels of the company's water. Mr. Carpenter did not appear, however, and the case was enlarged till to-morrow morning.

Saturday Afternoon's Practice Cricket Match.

A "pick up" practice cricket match was played on the P. A. A. A. grounds on Saturday afternoon. Owing to a shortage of players over thirty years of age, the match between members of the club of that age and those under it, did not take place. Messrs. S. Ray and T. Rutherford captained the selected sides. The game resulted in the defeat of the former's team by 105 to 53. The following are the scores:—

S. RAY'S TEAM.

For the victorious side Mr. T. Rutherford batted in his old style form for 37, making six three hits and one four hit, besides twos and ones. On the same side Messrs. H. Ray, C. McGill and W. Smith reached double figures. For the opposition, Messrs. E. Stratton and S. Ray batted well for 20 and 14 respectively.

By comparing the scores made in the practice matches since the opening of the season, it will be seen that a marked improvement has been made in the batting. At present the club has now a full team of strong bowlers, the latest addition being Mr. Logan, classical master of Galt Collegiate Institute, one of Canada's best, who has come to remain in town during the holidays.

The British Elections.

Press Comments on the Result.

LONDON, July 3.—The Daily News, commenting on the election returns, says: "The Government has not done badly considering the disadvantages under which it has been fighting."

The Standard says: "The result is highly encouraging to the Unionists. Either the Irish element in the English electorates is much less important than the Parnellites pretend, or the defections among the Liberals are more serious than Mr. Gladstone's friends would like to admit."

The Daily Telegraph says: "It is too early to prophecy the result, but so far there is little or no encouragement for Mr. Gladstone's wild projects."

The Times says:—"Though no conclusive numerical advantage has been gained by either side, it is evident, even with the transfer of the Irish vote, Mr. Gladstone barely holds his own in the boroughs.

The Parnellites Vindicated.

Mr. Rosendell, formerly Earl Spencer's secretary, in a speech at Skipton, last night, stated on the authority of private information to which he had access in Dublin Castle, that the Parnellites were perfectly free of the charge of complicity in the murders and outrages which had disgraced Ireland. He further said the charge that the Parnellites were hostile to the English people was utterly groundless.

LONDON, July 4, 3 a.m.—The result of the elections up to this hour stands:

Total number of seats	670
Number of elections held	343
To be held	327
Conservatives elected	165
Gladstonians	66
Unionists	24
Parnellites	18
Conservative majority over all	47

The total number of votes recorded in the first day's polling was: Gladstonian 235,063, Conservative 227,593, Unionist 31,829, Nationalists 2,911.

The Gladstonians hope, if they are defeated, that the Tories may get a large enough majority for a working government, in order that the country may feel the effects of thorough Tory rule for awhile and thus ultimately strengthen the Liberal cause. But while things look so bad at present for the Ministerialists, no safe calculations can be made of what the final result will be.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pay them a larger profit, the consumer being the loser thereby.

About 2 o'clock last Sunday morning a man named John W. Whitman entered the house of William O. Stewart, at Hampden station, N. B., without coat, hat or shoes, and attempted to use chloroform in the room of Miss Stewart, twenty years of age. She, however, awoke, gave the alarm, and her father and brother pursued and captured him and removed him to gaol. He was committed for trial.

A Horse's Intelligence.

A Stroudsburg, Pa., correspondent writes: A horse which has been in possession of the Peters family, in Bushkill, Pa., for twenty years, and which was famous for the almost human intelligence he frequently displayed, died recently. During the last few years of the horse's life he had been permitted to run at liberty, but was frequently hitched to haul the dead bodies of cattle or horses that died on the farm to a place near the Delaware river, where the carcasses were buried. The old horse always stood near and watched the burials with great interest and attention.

Some time ago this horse fell sick. One day, he was missed from his enclosure where he was being cared for. A search was made for him, and he was finally found lying dead on the spot where he had hauled the dead bodies of so many of his kind. As the place was out of the way of the old horse's usual haunts, and as he had never been known to go there except when driven there with some dead animal, no one who knew the horse believes that he did not seek the spot feeling that he was about to die, and to save the trouble of hauling his dead body there to be buried.

Among the instances told of his intelligence are the following: Late one night members of the family that owned him were awakened by a great noise on a piazza of the house. There was the loud neighing of a horse and the heavy stamping on the piazza floor. One of the inmates of the house went to the door. There was the old horse stamping and kicking and neighing with all his power. The discovery was made that an out-house near the dwelling was on fire. The old horse had given the alarm, and a disastrous fire was prevented.

One spring there was a flood in a stream on the place. A blind horse belonging to a neighbor got out of its pasture, and, wandering down to the swollen stream, in some way got into the water. It swam about in a circle and was unable to reach either shore. No one could render any aid to the poor animal, and there seemed no escape for it from drowning. The old Peters horse came along while the blind horse was straggling in the water, and, after a moment's survey of the situation, plunged in. He swam out to the blind horse and headed it off as it turned to make its usual circle, thus keeping its head pointed staight for shore as it swam. By heading the blind horse first on one side and then on the other he guided it safely to shore.

A Commission on Drinks.

A tall man with a sad, drooping mustache led several young men into a liquor shop on Baltimore street one Saturday night. The party braced up in front of the bar, and the tall man looked knowingly at his companions, and then bestowed a sly wink at the party in the white knit jacket.

"What are we going to have?" asked the tall man.

All hands took whisky. The tall man drank his with an air of satisfaction. As the party was leaving the tall man lingered.

"This is one whisky on the slate for me," he said to the barkeeper. "I'll drop in on Monday and get it."

The barkeeper nodded assent and marked up something on a slate. After all had gone out an habitue of the place asked the barkeeper what the tall man meant.

"Oh! him," he replied, "he's a capper, a stool-pigeon. He's in with the house. He's well known about town, and he makes a business of steering his friends in here. We pay him a commission on drinks. The size of his commission depends on what his friends drink. For that reason he never goes any lower than whisky. There's not enough profit in beer to allow much commission.

"Did you notice his ears," the barkeeper continued, "how they sit out from his head? This is because he is always listening for an invitation to take a drink."—Baltimore Herald.

Gen. Thomas B. Van Buren, late Consul-General to Japan, wrote an elaborate report on "Labor and Porcelain in Japan," and before leaving for home employed a native artist to decorate twelve copies of this report. The painting is said to be a marvel of artistic skill.

The best way to make a theatrical moon is thus described: Two drop scenes are used. Out of the first, in which is the sky scene, is cut a strip a yard wide, it being the path up which the moon is to travel. Immediately behind, and so close that the piece so removed is not discernible, is a second drop. From this a round piece is removed, and the place covered by white or yellow silk or some transparent cloth, and from behind a strong calcium light is thrown on the silk. The moon is made to rise by gently hauling up the back drop. Clouds are usually painted on strips extending across the path cut in the first drop, serving both to strengthen the drop laterally and add to the realism of the scene by having the moon disappear for a moment under a cloud.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE Toronto World says:—"Big Herman Cook is working East Simcoe for all it is worth to renew his license as its representative at Ottawa. He is a hard man to beat, and Conservative Candidate Quinn will have to hustle to get there."

Now that the Quebec Legislature is about to be dissolved, and a partizan Speaker with a judge's commission in his pocket is no longer required by the Tory party, the Dominion Government have gazetted the appointmen of Speaker Wurtele as a Superior Court Judge.

MANITOBA is not going to run behind in the matter of exhibitions this year. From September 28 to October 1 the Board of Agricultural of the Province will hold its eleventh annual fair at St. Boniface. Money prizes amounting to $10,000, besides medals and diplomas, will be awarded.

HON. WILLIAM MACDOUGALL has intimated that he will oppose Sir John Macdonald in Carleton county at the next Dominion election if requested to do so. Every seat in Eastern Ontario will be hotly contested, and the Liberals expect to make heavy gains in this district.

THE Bobcaygeon Independent risks the opinion that many of the Conservatives are becoming tired of being ruled by a personal Czar and not by a parliament selected by the people. Mr. Smiff thinks that the Tories will, however, work hard to win the next general election, for, he remarks, "Mr. Blake in power would be bad for Boodle and the Boy."

IN contrasting the British general elections of last November with those now going on, it may be pointed out that the first day's polling in the former, resulted in a net Tory gain of eleven seats. This time, on the first day's polling, there is a net Liberal gain of one seat. There is still no reason for discouragement of ultimate success on the part of the friends of Home Rule. So far the Tories have gained six seats and the Gladstonians seven, and there are still 510 seats to hear from—a ratio, if maintained, which will give Gladstone a majority.

SPEAKING in reference to the local Prince Edward Island elections, the Hamilton Times says that the Tory papers, afraid that the local elections in Prince Edward Island were going in the same direction as those in Nova Scotia against the Government—were at great pains a few days before the election to assure their readers that the issues were "purely local." How hypocritical this statement was, is now shown by the publication of a stereotyped letter sent by Sir John Macdonald to many wavering Tories in the island, earnestly pleading with them to try and save the Local Government from defeat. When a Prime Minister takes to this method of bolstering up an unpopular Government, it is easy to be seen that he is afraid of the future of his own Government, and is anxious to get all the prestige for his party that he can obtain, by hook or by crook.

HOW THE BROWNS' GOT A PIANO.

BY MISS AMELIA THROPP.

"My dear," said Mrs. Brown to her husband, as she sat at the breakfast table, whilst he was reading the morning paper, as he sipped his coffee, "I do wish our girls had a piano. It is too bad, John," she continued, appealingly, "that they are obliged to stay at Mrs. Elmer's after taking their lessons to practice. It is the only chance they get, poor things, and with such talent as Mary has, it is disgraceful."

Mr. Brown was a well-to-do merchant, residing at the city of P——, who spent so much for his own comfort that his amiable wife and two pretty daughters were obliged to practice the strictest economy.

"You know, dear," persisted his wife, "we have been doing our own house work for the last two years, and have saved two hundred and eighty dollars. If you would add three hundred to it, we could purchase a very good one. Mary is now sixteen, and it is time she was able to entertain company as nicely as other girls of her age. Besides, Tilly Higgins, our neighbor's girl, quite gives herself airs with our Mary and Martha, and I am sure we are as good as the Higgins'."

"Jane," replied Mr. Brown, "don't you think you are making an unreasonable demand to want such a sum of money these hard times to buy the girls a piano when it is all I can do to make both ends meet. It is unreasonable and ridiculous. I am not going to be ruined by my family, therefore, I will do no such thing. Girls now-a-days are altogether too fine. The other day I went to a little country village to collect a bill, and, going along one of the principal streets, I saw an old woman washing the sidewalk whilst the daughter was within the house playing on the piano. I'll have no such nonsense here. Our girls are good, industrious and saving, and they shan't be spoiled. Besides, I have not the money and that settles it."

"Oh," said his wife coaxingly, "if you would give up your club, wine and cigars for one year you could easily save the amount; and only think of the pleasure a little self denial on your part would be giving your children. Now do consent, John! That's a dear, good man, that you are."

If a mill-stone had been hung around Mr. Brown's neck he could not have been more surprised at his timid wife's audacity. Give up his club, wine and cigars! Was his wife crazy? Or did she think him so? Well, well, this was a pretty business! He would like to know what women would be at next, with their assurance, and his wife was getting as badly spoiled as the rest of her sex.

He dashed his clenched hands on the table with such force that some of the dishes waltzed off upon the floor, snatched up his hat, darted across the hall, and left the house, pulling the street-door to behind with a bang. He was heated and excited, regarding himself as very much insulted and abused. It was true, he thought, he must admit, "his wife was always amiable, kind and unselfish, but the idea of her asking him to give up his club, wine and cigars for a whole year to buy the girls a piano," such a demand fairly choked Mr. Brown with indignation. "As if," he said to himself, "a man who worked hard did not need these comforts." As he was thus arguing to himself, with the air of a martyr, turning a street corner he met the Misses McClain, who, approaching him, said:

"Glad to meet you, Mr. Brown. We want to have a little talk with you. Our school closes now in two weeks, and the exercises terminate with a grand concert. The best player is to get a handsome gold medal for a prize. Every one thinks your Mary or Tilly Higgins will get it, but it will require a great deal of practice for the pieces are very difficult. Tilly thinks she is sure of it, for she says, 'you have no piano at your house, and Mary won't be able to practice much,' but as you live next door, we are going to try and coax Tilly into generosity, and ask her to permit Mary to use her instrument a little time each day, and let the contest be a fair one. If she won't consent we will try some one else."

"You need do no such a thing," exclaimed Mr. Brown; "she should not touch Higgins' piano if they were willing, which I know they wouldn't be."

As he continued his way he muttered, "I won't have my girls going around asking favors, they can just stay at home." However, the idea of the red-headed Tilly Higgins playing at the concert, probably getting the prize, whilst his little Mary had to stay at home because she could not get the opportunity to practice, troubled Mr. Brown in spite of himself.

"I might try doing without it a year," he finally said to himself. "I don't see that my club, wine and cigars do me much good anyway, besides a year soon rolls around. I'll just take a walk down Chestnut street and take a look at one, that won't be buying it."

As he entered the ware-room of his friend, Mr. G——, and asked to be shown some instruments, he felt somewhat annoyed when his friend expressed surprise at his not having an instrument, remarking: "I have heard your eldest daughter is a first-class player, she must have labored under great disadvantages."

Mr. Brown colored at the remark, and said, "She shall have one, poor child! I want you to send a good one to my house immediately."

If he had not wished to have been shaken in his resolutions, he should have staid outside and contented himself by looking within. Like an old gentleman of whom I once heard, who, when he went with his daughters shopping, would stand outside the stores, take his cane and knock upon the window. When the clerk would appear and ask "what he wanted, and for him to please walk in," he would reply, "No, I thank you, you be so good as to send me that and that, and that, with the bill," pointing with his finger to what he wanted. When his girls would remonstrate with him on his singular way of doing, he would answer: "When I stay outside they can't coax me into taking what I don't wan't and can't afford."

In the evening when Mr. Brown arrived at home, and saw the happy faces of his wife and daughters, and heard his girls play upon the instrument, he enjoyed himself so much that he entirely forgot all about his club, wine and cigars.

And on the evening of the concert when his little Mary took the prize, and he was complimented on her beauty and talent, there was not in all that great city a happier man than our once injured Mr. Brown. On his way home he said to his wife:

"Jane! I am very thankful for one thing."

"And what is that, dear?" asked his wife, suspecting, but not willing to understand.

"Why, bless my heart, woman! Can't you guess? It is that I bought our girls that piano."

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

The beautiful face grew very serious and thoughtful.

"Why are so many truths disagreeable and sad? If I could rule, I would have the world so bright, so fair and glad, every one so happy. I cannot understand all this under-current of sorrow."

"Comte did not explain it, then, to your satisfaction?" said Miss Hastings.

"Comte!" cried the girl, impatiently. "I am not obliged to believe all I read! Once and for all, Miss Hastings, I do not believe in Comte or his fellows. I only read what he wrote because people seemed to think it clever to have done so. You know—you must know—that I believe in our great Father. Who could look round on this lovely world and not do so?"

Miss Hastings felt more hopeful of the girl then than she had ever felt before. Such strange, wild theories had fallen at times from her lips that it was some consolation to know she had still a child's faith.

Then came an interruption in the shape of a footman, with Sir Oswald's compliments, and would the ladies go to the drawing-room? There were visitors.

"Who are they?" asked Miss Darrell, abruptly.

The man replied:

"Sir George and Lady Hampton."

"I shall not go," said Pauline, decidedly; "that woman sickens me with her false airs and silly, false graces. I have not patience to talk to her."

"Sir Oswald will not be pleased," remonstrated Miss Hastings.

"That I cannot help—it is not my fault. I shall not make myself a hypocrite to please Sir Oswald."

"Society has duties which must be discharged, and which do not depend upon our liking; we must do our duty whether we like it of not."

"I detest society," was the abrupt reply—"it is all a sham!"

"Then why not do your best to improve it? That would surely be better than to abuse it."

"There is something in that," confessed Miss Darrell, slowly.

"If we each do our little best toward making the world even ever so little better than we found it," said Miss Hastings, "we shall not have lived in vain."

There was a singular grandeur of generosity about the girl. If she saw that she was wrong in an argument or an opinion, she admitted it with the most charming candor. That admission she made now by rising at once to accompany Miss Hastings.

The drawing-room at Darrell Court was a magnificent apartment; it had been furnished under the superintendence of the late Lady Darrell, a lady of exquisite taste. It was all white and gold, the white hangings with bullion fringe and gold braids, the white damask with a delicate border of gold; the pictures, the costly statues gleamed in the midst of rich and rare flowers; graceful ornaments, tall, slender vases were filled with choicest blossoms; the large mirrors, with their golden frames, were each and all perfect in their way. There was nothing gaudy, brilliant, or dazzling; all was subdued, in perfect good taste and harmony.

In this superb room the beauty of Pauline Darrell always showed to great advantage; she was in perfect keeping with its splendor. As she entered now, with her usual half-haughty, half-listless grace, Sir Oswald looked up with admiration plainly expressed on his face.

"What a queenly mistress she would make for the Court, if she would but behave like other people!" he thought to himself, and then Lady Hampton rose to greet the girl.

"My dear Miss Darrell, I was getting quite impatient, it seems an age since I saw you—really an age."

"It is an exceeding short one," returned Pauline; "I saw you on Tuesday, Lady Hampton."

"Did you? Ah, yes; how could I forget? Ah, my dear child, when you reach my age—when your mind is filled with a hundred different matters—you will not have such a good memory as you have now."

Lady Hampton was a little, over-dressed woman. She looked all flowers and furbelows—all ribbons and laces. She was, however, a perfect mistress of all the arts of polite society; she knew exactly what to say and how to say it; she knew when to smile, when to look sympathetic, when to sigh. She was not sincere; she never made the least pretence of being so. "Society" was her one idea—how to please it, how to win its admiration, how to secure a high position in it.

The contrast between the two was remarkable—the young girl with her noble face, her grand soul looking out of her clear dark eyes; Lady Hampton with her artificial smiles, her shifting glances, and would-be charming gestures. Sir Oswald stood by with a courtly smile on his face.

"I have some charming news for you," said Lady Hampton. "I am sure you will be pleased to hear it, Miss Darrell."

"That will quite depend on what it is like," interposed Pauline, honestly.

"You dear, droll child! You are so original; you have so much character. I always tell Sir Oswald you are quite different from any one else."

And though her ladyship spoke smilingly, she gave a keen, quiet glance at Sir Oswald's face, in all probability to watch the effect of her words.

"Ah, well," she continued, "I suppose that in your position a little singularity may be permitted," and then she paused, with a bland smile.

"To what position do you allude?" asked Miss Darrell.

Lady Hampton laughed again. She nodded with an air of great penetration.

"You are cautious, Miss Darrell. But I am forgetting my news. It is this—that my niece, Miss Elinor Rochford, is coming to visit me."

She waited evidently for Miss Darrell to make some complimentary reply. Not a word came from the proud lips.

"And when she comes I hope, Miss Darrell, that you and she will be great friends."

"I prefer friendships, Lady Hampton," was the blunt reply.

Sir Oswald looked horrified. Lady Hampton smiled still more sweetly.

"You are sure to like her. Elinor is most dearly loved wherever she goes."

"Is she a sweet creature?" asked Pauline, with such intolerable malgalery that Miss Hastings shuddered, while Sir Oswald turned pale.

"She is indeed," replied Lady Hampton, who, if she understood the sarcasm, made no sign. "With Sir Oswald's permission, I shall bring her to spend a long day with you, Miss Darrell."

"I shall be charmed," said Sir Oswald—"really delighted, Lady Hampton. You do me great honor indeed."

He looked at his niece for some little confirmation of his words, but that young lady appeared too haughty for speech; the word "honor" seemed to her strangely misapplied.

Lady Hampton relaxed none of her graciousness; her bland suavity continued the same until the end of the visit; and then, in some way, she contrived to make Miss Hastings understand that she wanted to speak with her. She asked the governess if she would go with her to the carriage, as she wished to consult her about some music. When they were alone, her air and manner changed abruptly. She turned eagerly to her, her eyes full of sharp, keen curiosity.

"Can you tell me one thing?" she asked. "Is Sir Oswald going to make that proud, stupid, illiterate girl his heiress—mistress of Darrell Court?"

"I do not know," replied Miss Hastings. "How should I be able to answer such a question?"

"Of course I ask in confidence—only in strict confidence; you understand that, Miss Hastings?"

"I understand," was the grave reply.

"All the county is crying shame on him," said her lady-ship. "A French painter's daughter. He must be mad to think of such a thing. A girl brought up in the midst of Heaven knows what. He never can intend to leave Darrell Court to her."

"He must leave it to some one," said Miss Hastings; "and who has a better right to it than his own sister's child?"

"Let him marry," she suggested, hastily; "let him marry, and leave it to children of his own. Do you think the county will tolerate such a mistress for Darrell Court—so blunt, so ignorant! Miss Hastings, he must marry."

"I can only suppose," replied the governess, "that he will please himself, Lady Hampton, without any reference to the county."

CHAPTER VI.

CAPTAIN LANGTON.

June, with its roses and lilies, passed on, the laburnums had all fallen, the lilies had vanished, and still the state of affairs at Darrell Court remained doubtful. Pauline, in many of those respects in which her uncle would fain have seen her changed, remained unaltered—indeed it was not easy to unlearn the teachings of a life-time.

Miss Hastings, more patient and hopeful than Sir Oswald, persevered, with infinite tact and discretion. But there were certain peculiarities of which Pauline could not be broken. One was a habit of calling everything by its right name. She had no notion of using any of those polite little fictions society delights in; no matter how harsh, how ugly the words, she did not hesitate to use it. Another peculiarity was that of telling the blunt, plain, abrupt truth, no matter what they cost, no matter who was pained. She tore aside the flimsy veil of society with zest; she spared no one in her almost ruthless denunciations. Her intense scorn for all kinds of polite fiction was somewhat annoying.

"You need not say that I am engaged, James," she said, one day, when a lady called whom she disliked. "I am not engaged, but I do not care to see Mrs. Camden."

Even that bland functionary looked annoyed. Miss Hastings tried to make some compromise.

"You cannot send such a message as that, Miss Darrell. Pray listen to reason."

"Sir Oswald and yourself agreed that she was——"

"Never mind that," hastily interrupted Miss Hastings. "You must not hurt any one's feelings by such a blunt message as that; it is neither polite nor well-bred."

"I shall never cultivate either politeness or good breeding at the expense of truth; therefore you had better send the message yourself, Miss Hastings."

"I will do so," said the governess, quietly. "I will manage it in such a way as to show Mrs. Camden that she is not expected to call again, yet so as not to humiliate her before the servants; but, remember, not at any sacrifice of truth."

Such contests were of daily, almost hourly, occurrence. Whether the result would be such a degree of training as to fit the young lady for taking the position she wished to occupy, remained doubtful.

Belshazzar's Warning.

"Tried in the balance and found wanting," is the general verdict rendered against most of the so-called cures for lung troubles. Such a decision has never been given against Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." On the contrary, it is conceded by thousands who have tried it, to be the only remedy for consumption (scrofula of the lungs) and scrofulous diseases generally. It will not cure when both lungs are most gone, but if taken when the disease is in the first stages it never fails. It is also specific for such scrofulous affections as fever-sores, white swellings, hip-joint disease, and great eating ulcers, and for blood taints generally, from whatever cause arising. By druggists.

There died in Oxford county last week Rev. W. H. Landon, of Woodstock, aged 80; Mr. Anthony Dawes, of Woodstock, aged 75; Mrs. Robert Kennedy, of Richwood, aged 75; Mrs. Alex. Hill, of Innerkip, aged 83; Mrs. John Brundle, of Washington, aged 86; and Mr. James McLarty, of East Nissouri, aged 67. Five of these spent the greater part of their lives in the county, and Mr. Dawes has resided in Woodstock for twenty years.

There seems to be some misapprehension relative to the price of Flour. I find a number of purchasers stating that the grade of Flour known as which is Scrofulous Disease of the Lungs, is promptly and certainly arrested and cured by this God-given remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its wonderful power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering the now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all

At a meeting of the Board of Education Committee on Appointments, held on Saturday evening, leave of absence was granted Miss M. Davidson, to allow her an opportunity of attending the Ottawa Normal School. It was decided to pay Mr. L. E. Horning two full years' salary for his two years' services, and to advertise in the Globe and Mail for a Mathematical and Science Master for the Collegiate Institute, to fill the vacancy caused by his resignation. The chairman was authorized to instruct the treasurer of the Board to pay teachers, who so desired, their salary for the holiday months in advance, deducting at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum.

Re-opening.

The services in connection with the re-opening of the Fairmount Methodist church, Cavan, which has been recently renovated, will be held on Sunday and Monday, July 11th and 12th. On Sunday, appropriate sermons will be delivered at 10.30 a. m. and 7 p. m., by Rev. D. Cattanach. Collections in aid of the building fund. On Monday, a public entertainment will be held in the church, commencing at 3 p. m., at which Revs. D. F. Gee, B. Greatrix and D. Cattanach will deliver addresses. At these services suitable music will be provided. At the conclusion of the entertainment in the church, (4.30 p.m.,) tea will be served in an adjacent grove. The Fairmount church has been thoroughly renovated and an active committee is sparing no pains to make its re-opening an occasion of special interest.

The Early Bird Caught.

Yesterday morning shortly after four o'clock, as Mr. James King was wending his way across Court House Park, he saw a large brown bird scurrying along the ground in front of him, being chased by hundreds of smaller feathered fry. He said to himself, "Jimmy, d'ye see the owl," and after it hot-foot. Having its attention attracted by the smaller birds, it did not take much notice of its new enemy, and continued to half run and fly along the ground. It stood at bay in an open spot, the rays from the rising sun striking it fair in the face, causing it to cover its eyes as an owl will do. Mr. King, acting upon his advantage, while the little birds attacked the owl in the front and flank, slipped up behind, clapped his hat over the owl's ears, optics and head, and at the same time twisting a towel around its talons to prevent it from being friendly, folded up its wings and carried it off home in triumph, where he cooped it up and now has it on exhibition.

Cricket.

The Secretary of the P. A. A. is arranging with Cobourg cricketers for a match to be played in Cobourg at an early date.

No. 1 Company

The members of No. 1 Company, 57th Battalion, are requested to meet for drill to-night at 7.30 sharp.

Band at the Park To-night.

The Fire Brigade Band boys, arrayed in their new uniforms, will give one of their open air concerts in the Court House Park, this evening. The public is invited to be present.

Lacrosse.

The "Crete" lacrosse club will play a match with the Hastings club at Hastings to-morrow. The local club expects to put a lively team in the field and will do their best to interest the Hastings boys.

True Blue's Meeting.

A special meeting of the True Blues will be held in their hall on Wednesday evening, at 8 o'clock. All members are requested to attend.—FRED. W. WEIR, W. M.

Sacred Oratorio.

Prof. Parker and a select choir will render Stainer's beautiful oratorio, "Christ and His Soldiers," in St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, this evening, the 5th inst., at 8 p.m. Admission free. The public cordially invited.

Rowing.

The four-oared crew, stroked by Mr. A. Loeb, which, owing to a misunderstanding, fouled Mr. W. Matthews' crew in Friday evening's race, are anxious to meet their opponents again, and a race between these crews will be a special feature of the next regatta.

Lakefield Social.

Bear in mind the delightful Church Social to be given on the handsome grounds of R. C. Strickland, Esq., Lakefield, on Tuesday, July 6th. Open air concert and refreshments. The evening train from Peterborough, leaving at 6.15, will be held to leave Lakefield at 10.30.

Arrival of St. Andrew's Organ.

The several parts of the new pipe organ for St. Andrew's church, arrived in town on Saturday and to-day from the factory of Mr. E. Lye of Toronto. Mr. Lye and assistants will place the organ in position during the week. It is said to be a superior organ of the finest finish.

St. Luke's S. S. Excursion

St. Luke's Sunday School excursion will be held to-morrow, to Clear Lake. Train leaves Peterborough at 9 a. m. The steamer "Cruiser," with palace scow attached, will take the excursionists at Lakefield on the arrival of the train from Peterborough. Tickets, 40 cents, children 20 cents.

Church Chimes.

The regular quarterly communion services was held in St. Paul's church yesterday morning. Rev. Mr. Little, late of Bowmanville, a guest of Rev. Mr. Torrance, assisted in the services.

Rev. Mr. Torrance announced yesterday evening, that the following clergymen would occupy the pulpit of St. Paul's during the first five Sundays of his vacation:—Rev. Mr. McEwan, of Lakefield; Prof. Burwash, of Victoria College, Cobourg; Rev. W. Roger, of London, and Principal Grant, of Queen's University, Kingston.

Smart's New Store.

Mr. D. Smart has removed his music emporium one door south, and now occupies the lately remodeled and handsome premises in the Rowe Block, George street. The shop is particularly attractive, having been thoroughly overhauled. A plate glass front, new flooring and artistic papering, with which the premises were recently fitted, together with Mr. Smart's stock of Bell and Karn organs, Williams sewing machines, sheet music and musical instruments of all kinds, artistically arranged, gives the shop a very inviting appearance. Mr. Smart will no doubt continue to do a lively business in his new and pretty premises.

The Mirthful Mikado.

The music-loving public will not forget that Templeton's Company of first-class artists will present Gilbert & Sullivan's splendid opera, the Mikado, in Bradburn's Opera House on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, July 7th and 8th. This opera has given unbounded delight wherever produced, and the coming company, which includes the principal artists who first produced the play in New York, will give the public such a treat as has seldom before been presented. The piece will be beautifully mounted and the costumes rich and appropriate. All the soloists are first-rate, and an effective chorus will make the rendition of the opera a great success. Prices: reserved seats, $1.00; plan at Hartley's music store. Admission, 50c. and 35c.

Corrected Time.

An item appearing in the EXAMINER a day or two ago, respecting the town clock gave a misleading impression. The clock was five minutes behind railway time, because the railway time had been put ahead five minutes. The discrepancy arose from no defect in the town clock, which is now from day to day keeping excellent, in fact it has done so ever since it was placed in Mr. Muncaster's charge, last April. It is regulated by Toronto Observatory time, received by telegraph, two or three times per week, or oftener if necessary. The time was thus received this morning, and the town clock was twenty-five seconds fast, and the total variation amounts to between five and fifteen seconds per week, a trifling variation considering the size and situation of the town timekeeper.

Personal.

Mr. W. Scott, student of Toronto School of Medicine, is home for the holidays.

Mr. Frank Adams, book keeper for Messrs. Fitzgerald & Stanger, left town this morning for a trip through Michigan.

Miss Jennie Percival of Pembroke, won the gold medal presented by Geo. A. Cox, Esq., for competition by the students of the Ontario Ladies' College, Whitby.

Mr. C. Logan, Classical Master of the Galt Collegiate Institute, arrived in town on Friday, and will spend the vacation here. He will add to the strength of the P. A. A. A. Cricket Club, of which he is a member.

Mr. J. P. Eastwood, has had the degree of B. C. L., confirmed upon him by Trinity College, Toronto. Mr. Eastwood wrote for the degree in Toronto, from June 16th to 21st. He is to be congratulated on the distinction he has won.

Mr. Frank Dobbin, the clever pencil pusher for the local columns of the Lindsay Post was in town over Sunday visiting friends and arranging for the Lindsay Methodist Sunday School excursion to Peterborough. They will pic-nic at Mrs. Dickson's grove, on Friday next.

Mr. J. P. Dunn, lately C. P. R. agent, Fergus, arrived in town on Saturday evening, and this morning assumed the position of local agent, which Mr. Enright, relieving agent, has held since the departure of Mr. Jennings, for Toronto. Mr. Dunn was very popular at Fergus, and was presented with a gold headed cane on leaving that place. As he is a good business man, no doubt he will become popular here. Mr. Enright has been removed to Ingersoll.

The Reason Why.

Why is it that every one is, as the average school girl would say, "dead gone on" the Forester's excursion? The reason is, in the first place that the Forester's have secured a justly earned reputation of always making a a success of what they undertake and they have in the coming excursion to Toronto, on Tuesday, July 13th, set themselves the task of excelling all previous efforts. In the second place the Queen City, at the date of the excursion and for the eight days for which the tickets are good, will be a scene of unrivalled attraction. 20,000 Knights of Pythias in the city, and the gorgeous receptions, drillings and ceremonials incident to their visit, will be a series of events, not likely to happen in this century again. The Torontos and Rochesters International League game of baseball will be worth seeing by those interested in the game. Just think of it, $2.15 for the round trip, covering a period of eight days—first-class excursion coaches—return by regular train. Eight days in Toronto at its period of greatest attractions, with two hours' steam to Niagara at nominal rates, available any day. Remember the day, July 13th. Train leaves Peterborough, Midland station, at 7 o'clock, a.m. Tickets only $2.15, good for the round trip of eight days, may be had from any member of the committee (see posters) or at the bookstores.

RUPTURE CURED IN FROM 30 TO 90 DAYS BY WEARING EGAN'S IMPERIAL TRUSS

Read the following extract from a letter of a well-known citizen of St Catharines.—hundreds like it:

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 28th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two springless trusses made in York State, costing me $30. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. H. KING.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child now; and 99 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. When writing please mention this paper. Address

Police Court.

Mr. R. N. Roddy Charged With Committing an Aggravated Assault Upon E. J. Sanders.

Mr. R. N. Roddy was arraigned before Police Magistrate Dumble this morning, charged by Robert John Sanders with having committed an aggravated assault upon him, the informant, by maliciously inflicting upon him, with a weapon, grievous bodily harm.

Mr. Roddy pleaded not guilty, and elected to be tried summarily by the magistrate.

Mr. W. H. Moore appeared for the defendant, and Mr. R. E. Wood for the Crown.

Robert John Sanders, the complainant, was sworn, and testified,—I was in Mr. Roddy's on Saturday night between 10 and 11 o'clock. I was in the front room, where Mr. Roddy was sitting in a chair; he said to me, "you had better get out, you are drunk." I replied that I was not drunk; Roddy blamed me for not reading the [illegible] I delivered for him. I went to Mr. [illegible]'s to see Jimmy Wainright; Roddy intimated something about me informing on him—for selling whiskey I guess. I said he would be the last man I would inform on. I stood near a tree for a minute or two; Roddy came out and stood at the door; he then went down street, (west) about a hundred yards; he was coming back and I walked towards him and stood near the corner of the barber shop, at the alley leading from Roddy's backyard; Roddy passed me and went into his house; I heard him walk through his house and heard his footsteps as he came out through the alleyway; I noticed him come close to me and turned round; I saw his white coat and vest; I had not time to look twice as he struck me, with what I do not know, knocking me against the wall; I did not fall to the ground; he did not strike me with his hand; the blow cut and bruised my forehead; Roddy never spoke but went back through the alleyway; I went up street and met John White and "Mick" Larose, who tied a handkerchief on my head; Dr. Haliday dressed the wound that night; John Jamieson took me up to his house; I am quite positive Roddy did not strike me with his fist; I was sober at the time.

To Mr. Moore.—My home is in Ashburnham, I left home after [illegible] I left Ashburnham in the afternoon with John Connell; he was also with me in the evening. He was with me at Roddy's. We had something to drink in the afternoon and evening—two glasses of beer each in the afternoon, and one each in the evening; I left home about six o'clock, and after walking around street, went to Roddy's about ten o'clock. I was not ejected out of Roddy's [illegible] in the evening. I did not ask Roddy to allow me to go into his bar and did not threaten him; I said something but do not recollect what it was—but think I said "I suppose you think we'll haul you up"; I had a few words with Roddy about the [illegible].

Dr. Halliday.—I saw Saunders Saturday night about [illegible] o'clock; [illegible] him come with his [illegible]; I found he had a wound dressed; it was a bruised wound; the skin of the forehead was [illegible] torn about an inch, with ragged edges; the bruise extended around the wound about three quarters of an inch; I should say the blow was caused by a blow with something hard and blunt; I don't think it could have been made with a man's fist; it might have been made with a smooth stone or metal knuckles. I have never seen a wound made by a slung shot.

To Mr. Moore.—The wound might have been the result of a fall if he was utterly helpless, or in a fit; he was not helpless when he came to me; I judged that he had been drinking, but he walked straight; his breath was decided and indicated that he had been drinking sour beer; I don't think the blow would tend to sober him; it was not a very serious wound; Saunders came to me probably a hour after the wound had been made.

John Connell was called and gave evidence with regard to what he and Saunders had been doing during the day. He said they had been drinking during the entire afternoon and that Saunders was under the influence of liquor.

After [illegible] the court adjourned till three o'clock in the afternoon.

Fun Among the Fishers.

Good Work by the "Terror."—Three More Seizures.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 5.—A Shelburne despatch says that the seizures of three American fishing schooners has created greater excitement than any event that has occurred here during the last half century. American vessels going to the Grand Banks on second trips find Shelburne the most convenient port of call for bait, ice and men. A cove in the harbor known as Gunning Cove is a noted bait supply depot. The cruiser "Terror" has been lying in Shelburne harbor for a week apparently doing nothing, but meanwhile Commander Quigley has been quietly obtaining information of the arrangements made by the bait people at Gunning Cove for surreptitiously supplying American with bait, who were to run into port after dark. On Friday he seized the Portland schooner, "City Point," and on Saturday he captured two other Portland vessels, the "C. B. Harrington" and "G. W. Cushing." The three prizes lying side by side are anchored in the old naval anchorage ground of the harbor. The decks patrolled with guards from the cruiser "Terror" armed with cutlasses and revolvers, presents a scene not witnessed here since the days of the captured American privateers of 1812. The American fishermen are in great straits. They can catch no mackerel outside the three mile limit, while inside their Canadian cousins are hauling in the finny treasure hand over hand. The Yankee fishermen will soon be on their knees for another treaty.

THE RIGHT MAN.

The Rev. Anderson Halbert, who recently fell heir to a large tract of land, advertised for some colored man of experience to take charge of a plantation. Old Simon Peters, a well known colored preacher, applied for the place.

"Do you think that you can take charge of the place?" Mr. Halbert asked.

"Wall, sah, ef I didn' think so I wouldn' come ter yer. I knows all erbout er plan'ation, fur I wus raised dar."

"Know all about planting cotton?"

"It's right inter my ban'. Ain't neber done nothin' else."

"I understand that you are a preacher."

"Yas, sah, dat I is."

"Well, it is on this account as well as on any other that I employ you, for I want no one but a man of high moral sensibility."

"Dat's me."

"I am glad to hear it. There are a large number of negroes in the neighborhood and I want you to preach to them."

"I'll do it, sah."

"I want you to organize Sunday-schools, and teach the children."

"Dat's whut I 'lows ter do. I's been lookin' fur er place o' dis kine fer er long time, an' de Lawd ain't gwine ter let yer suffer fur givin' me dis beah opportunity."

"I hope not."

"I knows He won't boss. Gimme yer han's. We wantster jine han's in de 'junction o' dis gre't 'ligious week."

"I want you to go at once, Simon, for it is time to be getting in the crop."

"Gwine right erway, sah."

About three weeks afterward Mr. Halbert met old Simon on the street.

"How is everything on the plantation?"

"Fust rate, neber better, sah."

"Glad to hear it. Land in good condition?"

"Mighty fine."

"Got plenty of tools?"

"Oh, yas, sah, but I wush yer'd sen' down er nuder bar'l o' meal an' er few mo' middlin's o' meat. Hard wuck makes er man eat powerful, sah."

"All right, I'll give you an order for what supplies you want."

"Thankee, sah. Oh, I sees dat yesse'f knows how ter fa'm."

Mr. Halbert was delighted with his prospects. During his entire life he had been in embarrassing want of money, but now, with the income of a planter, he could live in a befitting way. He wrote to several cotton dealers and with one of them he made satisfactory arrangements. He intended several times to visit his plantation, but something always came up to interfere with his design. He was prompt in sending supplies and it must be confessed that old Simon was prompt in asking for them.

"Why, how are you, Simon?" the minister one day exclaimed upon meeting his manager.

"Fust rate, sah, fust rate, in fack neber better."

"Everything is getting all right on the plantation, I suppose?"

"Lubly, sah, lubly."

"How many bales to the acre do you expect to make?"

"Dar ain't no tellin', sah, fur de lan' down dar is de deceibin'est groun' I eber seed in my life. Yer kaint hardly tell nothin' erbout it. Cuis lan', I tells yer."

"I'll be satisfied with half a bale per acre."

"I sklaimed dat yer kaint tell nothin' erbout it. Say, boss, wush yer'd sen' me down er nuder bar'l o' meal an' midlin' mo' meat."

"Look here, Simon, aren't you rather wasteful of the supplies I send down there?"

"Oh, no, sah, not er tall. Yer doan ketch me wastin' nuthin' dat's good ter eat. I'se one o' de keerfulest men yer eber seed in yer life boss."

Somehow the minister grew anxious, so several days after his last interview with old Simon he went down to see how his crop was getting along. As he rode along a lane he was astonished to find his fields overgrown with weeds; and further on, he was horrified upon discovering that not a single stalk of cotton was visible on his land. He hurried to the plantation house. Before reaching the place his ears were greeted with a hymn. He stealthily stepped up on the gallery and looked in. The main room of the house was crowded with colored people, and, on a platform, old Simon stood preaching.

"'Brudderen,' said he, 'I'se got ter hab some mo' money, or we kain't hab ernuder feast o' de passober. Dat last bar'l o' meal an' two middlin's o' meat whut I bought wid de las' money I c'leckted is erbout out an' now I wants fi' dollars mo'."

Just then old Simon caught sight of the minister. The colored divine dismissed the congregation and approached the minister.

"You old scoundrel," exclaimed Mr. Halbert, "I ought to kill you."

"Kill me? W'y, boss, whut's I done?"

"You haven't done anything, you old thief. You have run me in debt, and have ruined my prospects for a whole year."

"Look heah, yer's er mighty strange pusson, somehow. Wanted me ter preach de gospel an' start up Sunday-schools, an' now arter I'se done it yer wants ter raise er kick. De days o' de saints ain't ober yit. Look out, dean yer choke me! Ef yer kicks me ergin I'll hurt yer. Dar, yer's done it ergin. I kaint stay heah wid such er fidgety pusson as yerse'f is. TUESDAY, JULY 6, 1886.

THE SILLY SEASON.

The silly season has struck the editor of our down-street contemporary hard. This imaginative individual in yesterday's issue, fathers the following paragraph. The Review says:

"Dame Rumor hath it that at a recent caucus of some of the leading Reformers of East and West Peterborough, it was decided to run Mr. Thos. Blezard, M. P. P., for the Commons and Mr. John Moloney, Reeve of Douro, for the local for the East Riding, and Mr. J. R. Stratton, of the Examiner, for the local in the West Riding, at the next general election."

This is purely imaginary. There has been no caucus of leading Reformers, that we are aware of, and, therefore, such decision, as alleged, could not have been arrived at. It is not the custom of the "leading Reformers" of this riding to hold hole-and-corner meetings for the purpose of selecting candidates. The matter is attended to openly and above-board and no candidate, if he felt so inclined, can by any sort of sneak work and secret wire pulling, foist himself upon the party as the party nominee—of the candidate's own selection. The cases of the late Mr. Campbell and Mr. Blezzard, illustrate the Reform method, which is to call a general convention of the party and and select the best available man for the position. The Review need not worry itself and make itself ridiculous by dog-days prognostications. When the time shall come, it will see Reform candidates in the field who will give their opponents all they want to do. The reference to Mr. Moloney, Reeve of Douro, is the most unintelligiele of all. He has been a Conservative all his life, and is not at all a probable party, for "leading Reformers" to select as a candidate in the Liberal interest. Mr. Moloney's, popularity and straightforward mode of action may make him distasteful to the little clique of Tories who seek to control, especially the west riding, and it may be suggested that this explains the Review's anxiety to read Mr. Moloney out of the Conservative party in so summary a manner

MR. PHIPPS AND FORESTRY.

Mr. R. W. Phipps has long taken an active and intelligent interest in the important subject of Canadian Forestry, and his latest report has been looked for with great interest; and it fully fills the expectations formed of its interest and importance. The report referred to contains among other forestry information, a description of what has been done this year in Ontario. One most important item has been the appointment, in accordance with a recommendation, made in Mr. Phipps' last year's report, of a body of men paid as follows, half by the Ontario Government, half by the lumbermen interested, to assist in enforcing the Fire Act, to prevent the occurrence and spread of forest fires. This precaution will doubtless tend to save from destruction, large areas of valuable timber and also tend to perpetuate much forest on land useless except in forest. Mr. Phipps evidently takes nothing for granted that can be verified by actual observation. The report shows that he has visited several places in the United States, where important practical experiments in forestry have been made, and much valuable information has been gleaned and set forth in the report. We have, as yet, no data in Canada to inform us of the money profit arising from tree planting for commercial purposes, so far as the actual sale of timber is concerned. This having an important bearing on sylviculture, quotations and descriptions are given of actual British and American experiments with full results. The Canadian forestry question being intimately connected with the amount of timber standing in the United States, a full account of the position of affairs in the latter country is given, State by State, with results of over-clearing and other results. The planting of evergreen wind-breaks is the simplest and most practicable mode of regaining our lost forest shelter, and if followed up, would, at slight expense to each farmer, produce an incalculable amount of good to both him and to the country at large. It is gratifying, therefore, that an exhaustive chapter has been devoted to this subject discussing the advisability and method of successfully growing wind breaks, with valuable hints as to the trees fit for the purpose. There is also (and it makes the report valuable for reference,) a complete list of the trees of Ontario, giving scientific descriptions and means of knowing each, with statement of what other parts of North America they are found in, and value, uses, and strength of timber in each. Many letters containing much information on local forestry, will also be found from parts of Ontario and a valuable statement concerning effects of forest denudations by leading American Scientists.

The limited space available only by no means do justice to even a general review of the interesting contents of Mr. Phillips' valuable report, and we shall have pleasure in again referring to phases of the subject not now alluded to. At present, we recommend all those interested in the subject of forestry—and it affects, if it does not interest, all—to make application to Mr. R. W. Phillips, 223 Richmond street west, Toronto who will be pleased to forward copies of the report—so long as the edition lasts, to any individual address supplied him.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

"This is really very satisfactory," said Sir Oswald, abruptly, one morning, as he entered the library, where Miss Hastings awaited him. "But," he continued, "before I explain myself, let me ask you how are you getting on—what progress are you making with your tiresome pupil?"

The gentle heart of the governess was grieved to think that she could not give a more satisfactory reply. Little real progress had been made in study; less in manner.

"There is a mass of splendid material, Sir Oswald," she said; "but the difficulty lies in putting it into shape."

"I am afraid," he observed, "people will make remarks; and I have heard more than one doubt expressed as to what kind of hands Darrell Court is likely to fall into should I make Pauline my heiress. You see she is capable of almost anything. She would turn the place into an asylum; she would transform it into a college for philosophers, a home for needy artists—in fact, anything that might occur to her—without the least hesitation."

Miss Hastings could not deny it. They were not speaking of a manageable nineteenth century young lady, but of one to whom no ordinary rules applied, whom no customary measures fitted.

"I have a letter here," continued Sir Oswald, "from Captain Aubrey Langton, the son of one of my oldest and dearest friends. He proposes to pay me a visit, and—pray, Miss Hastings, pardon me for suggesting such a thing, but I should be so glad if he would fall in love with Pauline. I have an idea that love might educate and develop her more quickly than anything else."

Miss Hastings had already thought the same thing; but she knew whoever won the love of such a girl as Pauline Darrell would be one of the cleverest of men.

"I am writing to him to tell him that I hope he will remain with us for a month; and during that time I hope, I fervently hope, he may fall in love with my niece. She is beautiful enough. Pardon me again Miss Hastings, but has she ever spoken to you of lovers' lovers?"

"No," she is in that respect, as in many others, quite unlike the generality of girls. I have never heard an allusion to such matters from her lips—never once."

This fact seemed to Sir Oswald stranger than any other; he had no idea that girls devoted the greater part of their thoughts to such subjects.

"Do you think," he inquired, "that she cared for any one in Paris—any of those men, for instance, whom she used to meet at her father's?"

"No," replied Miss Hastings; "I do not think so. She is strangely backward in all such respects, although she was brought up entirely among gentlemen."

"Among—pardon me, my dear madame, not gentlemen—members, we will say, of a gentlemanly profession."

Sir Oswald took from his gold snuff-box a pinch of most delicately-flavored snuff, and looked as though he thought the very existence of such people a mistake.

"Any little influence that you may possess over my niece, Miss Hastings, will you kindly use in Captain Langton's favor? Of course, if anything should come of my plan—as I fervently hope there may—I shall stipulate that the engagement last two years. During that time I shall trust to the influence of love to change my niece's character."

It was only a fresh complication—one from which Miss Hastings did not expect much.

That same day, during dinner, Sir Oswald told his niece of the expected arrival of Captain Langton.

"I have seen so few English gentlemen," she remarked, "that he will be a subject of some curiosity to me."

"You will find him—that is, if he resembles his father—a high-bred, noble gentleman," said Sir Oswald, complacently.

"Is he clever?" she asked. "What does he do?"

"Do!" repeated Sir Oswald. "I do not understand you."

"Does he paint pictures or write books?"

"Heaven forbid!" cried Sir Oswald, proudly. "He is a gentleman."

Her face flushed hotly for some minutes, and then the flush died away, leaving her paler than ever.

"I consider artists and writers gentlemen," she retorted—"gentlemen of a far higher stamp than those to whom fortune has given money and nature has denied brains."

Another time a sharp argument would have resulted from the throwing down of such a gauntlet. Sir Oswald had something else in view, so he allowed the speech to pass.

"It will be a great pleasure for me to see my old friend's son again," he said. "I hope, Pauline, you will help me to make his visit a pleasant one."

"What can I do?" she asked, brusquely.

"What a question!" laughed Sir Oswald. "Say rather, what can you not do? Talk to him, sing to him. Your voice is magnificent, and would give any one the greatest pleasure. You can ride out with him."

"If he is a clever, sensible man, I can do all that you mention; if not, I shall not trouble myself about him. I never could endure either tiresome or stupid people."

"My young friend is not likely to prove either," said Sir Oswald, sagely; and Miss Hastings wondered in her heart what the result of it all would be.

That same evening Miss Darrell talked of Captain Langton, weaving many bright fancies concerning him.

"I suppose," she said, "that it is not always the most favorable specimens of the English who visit Paris. We used to see such droll caricatures. I like a good caricature above all things—do you, Miss Hastings?"

"When it is good, and pains no one," was the sensible reply.

The girl turned away with a little impatient sigh.

"Your ideas are all colorless," she said, sharply. "In England it seems to me that everybody is alike. You have no individuality, no character."

"If character means, in your sense of the word, ill-nature, to mar the beauty," replied Miss Hastings. "All goodhearted people strive to save each other from pain."

"I wonder," said Pauline, thoughtfully, "if I shall like Captain Langton? We have been living here quietly enough; and I feel as though some great change were coming. You have no doubt experienced that peculiar sensation which creeps over one just before a heavy thunder-storm? I have that strange, half-nervous, half-restless sensation now."

"You will try to be amiable, Pauline," put in the governess, quietly. "You must find Sir Oswald evidently thinks a great deal of this young friend of his. You will try not to shock your uncle in any way—not to violate those little conventionalities that he respects so much."

"I will do my best; but I must be myself—always myself. I cannot assume a false character."

"Then let it be your better self," said the governess, gently; and for one minute Pauline Darrell was touched.

"That sweet creature, Lady Hampton's niece, will be here next week," she remarked, after a short pause. "What changes will be brought into our lives, I wonder?"

Of all the changes possible, least of all she expected the tragedy that afterwards happened.

CHAPTER VII.

THE INTRODUCTION.

It was a never-to-be-forgotten evening when Captain Langton reached Darrell Court—an evening fair, bright, and calm. The sweet southern wind bore the perfume of flowers; the faint ripples of the fountains, the musical song of the birds seemed almost to die away on the evening breeze; the sun appeared unwilling to leave the sapphire sky, the flowers unwilling to close. Pauline had lingered over her books until she could remain in-doors no longer; then, by Miss Hasting's advice she dressed for dinner which was delayed an hour—afterward went into the garden.

Most girls would have remembered, as they dressed that a handsome young officer was coming; Miss Darrell did not make the least change in her usual toilet. The thin, fine dress of crape fell in statuesque folds round the splendid figure; the dark hair was drawn back from the beautiful brow, and negligently fastened with her favorite silver arrow; the white neck and fair round arms gleamed like white marble through the thin folds of crape. There was not the least attempt at ornament; yet no queen arrayed in royal robes ever looked more lovely.

Pauline was a great lover of the picturesque. With a single flower, a solitary knot of ribbon, she could produce an effect which many women would give all their jewels to achieve. Whatever she wore took a kind of royal grace from herself which no other person could impart. Though her dress might be made of the same material as that of others, it never looked the same. On her it appeared like the robes of a queen.

As Pauline was passing through the corridor, Miss Hastings met her. The governess looked scrutinizingly at the plain evening dress; it was the same that she had worn yesterday. Evidently there was no flirtish desire to attract.

"Pauline, we shall have a visitor this evening," said Miss Hastings; "you might add a few flowers to your dress."

She passed on, with a smile of scorn. Almost the first thing that caught her attention out of doors was a large and handsome fuchsia. She gathered a spray of the rich purple and crimson flowers, and placed it negligently in her hair. Many women would have stood before their mirror for an hour without producing the same superb effect. Then she placed another spray of the same gorgeous flower in the bodice of her dress. It was all done without effort, and she would have been the last in the world to suspect how beautiful she looked. Then she went on to the fountain, for the beautiful, calm evening had awakened all the poet's soul within her. The grand, sensitive nature thrilled—the beautiful, poetical mind revealed in this hour of nature's most supreme loveliness. A thousand bright fancies surged through her heart and brain; a thousand poetical ideas shaped themselves into words, and rose to her lips.

Beinhauer's Warning.

"Tried in the balance and found wanting," is the general verdict rendered against most of the so-called cures for lung troubles. Such a decision has never been given against Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." On the contrary, it is conceded by thousands who have tried it, to be the only remedy for consumption (scrofula of the lungs) and scrofulous diseases generally. It will not cure when both lungs are most gone, but if taken when the disease is in the first stages it never fails. It is also specific for such scrofulous affections as fever-sores, white swellings, hip-joint disease, and great eating ulcers, and for blood taints generally, from whatever cause arising. CONSUMPTION, which is Scrofulous Disease of the Lungs, is promptly and certainly arrested and cured by this Golden Remedy, when taken in the early stages of the disease. From its wonderful power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all

TO DEPOSITORS—Deposits are received by this Company both on current account and for periods of one year or longer. The rate of interest paid on amounts deposited on current account and which may be withdrawn by check in such sums as the depositor may from time to time require, is FOUR per cent., either paid or compounded half-yearly, and the rate on yearly deposits is FIVE per cent.

TO INVESTORS—The five and ten year FIVE PER CENT DEBENTURES of this Company which are issued in denominations of $100, $200, $500 and $1000 each, transferable by endorsement, with half-yearly interest Coupons attached, payable at the Head Office of the Company in Peterborough, or at any Branch of the Bank of Toronto in Canada, afford a safe and convenient mode of investment.

The funds of the Company being invested in first mortgages on Real Estate, no better security can be offered to depositors or debenture-holders, they having a first claim or mortgage on the whole Assets of the Company, the shareholders having the second. The annual statement shows that the amount so invested was over $900,000, and on the security of real estate at least double that value.

By the laws of Ontario, Trustees, Executors and Administrators may deposit Trust Funds of the estates which they control in this Company, and are free from all further liability, a privilege of which many have largely availed themselves.

TO BORROWERS—Money is obtainable from this Company on approved Real Estate security at the Lowest Current Rates of Interest.

The Mortgage may be repaid by yearly instalments, or otherwise as may be agreed upon, the interest ceasing at once on all amounts paid on account of the sum borrowed.

Applications may be made either to the Head Office, or to any of the Agents.

The City Battalion.

Companies Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 6, under command of Captain Edwards, Captain Lingard, Lieutenant Hill, and Captain Chester, respectively, had a splendid drill in the drill shed yesterday evening. The companies were well represented and presented a fine appearance. There is a healthy rivalry between the companies, while the interest in the battalion is rising rapidly. A battalion equal to the best city regiments will probably be the outcome. A red coat is decidedly fashionable this season.

This tie will be played off by July 10th.

Band and Baloon.

An unusually large audience assembled in the park yesterday evening to enjoy the delightful concert provided by the Fire Brigade band. The programme throughout was excellent, while the pleasant surroundings also added to the entertainment. During an intermission a number of the firemen filled and and set off a large pink and blue tissue paper balloon, the remainder of the fireworks display of the evening of Dominion day. Besides carrying the usual illuminator the balloon bore upwards with it a long squib which occasionally exploded discharging variegated sparks. It rose gracefully from among the trees, floated high above the jail and court house away northeastward, and was watched with interest for a long time. After a lengthy medley, concluded by the national anthem, the concert closed, and the audience, with a few exceptions of course, proceeded homeward.

Christ and His Soldiers.

A large audience assembled at St. Luke's Church, yesterday, to hear the repitition of Farmer's Sacred Cantata, "Christ and His Soldiers," by Prof. Parker and a select choir of thirty voices, which was given by the same vocalists in St. Luke's School room some months ago. The repetition was in every way a success, notwithstanding the sultry weather. The soloists acquitted themselves creditably, while the choruses were full and spirited, all the parts being well sustained throughout, especially the concluding triumphal chorusses of the soldiers. A liberal collection was taken up to defray expenses. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Prof. Parker and the choir for the excellent entertainment provided.

A Former Resident Honored.

The Daily Manitoban, published at Winnipeg, had in its issue of Saturday an excellent portrait of Land Commissioner Smith—Mr. H. H. Smith, ex-mayor of Peterborough, and one of our best known and most popular citizens. The following letter press accompanies the portrait:

"Mr. H. H. Smith, whose portrait is presented to the readers of the Manitoban with this sketch, occupies as Commissioner of Dominion Lands one of the most responsible positions in the gift of the Dominion Government. He is well known to the settlers of Manitoba and the Northwest, whose ardent friend and sympathizer he has proved himself during his administration of the affairs of the outside service of his department. Mr. Smith was born at Cobourg, Ontario, Dec. 17, 1847, and is therefore in his 39th year. He is a son of the Hon. Sidney Smith, whose name is prominently connected with Canadian affairs. Mr. Smith is an able lawyer, and earned more than a local reputation during several years' practice of his profession in Peterborough. He assumed control of the department as successor to the late respected Aquilla Walsh, Esq."

Mr. Smith's many friends, for he had and still has hosts of personal friends in this town, will be pleased to see that his many excellent business qualities have been recognized, and that he is the honored head of a department embracing a dozen or so subordinate officers.

The Hot Wave.

This hot wave can't last. In a day or two it will spend its strength and then will succeed a week or two of fine cooler weather, beginning about the date of the Forester's excursion to Toronto, which date is Tuesday, July 13th. Toronto is admitted to be the coolest city on the continent. The south-west breezes, sweeping across the lake, lose their fiery temper and blow cool and refreshing on the land. The city is also beautifully and abundantly protected with shade trees and handsome parks. The Forester's Committee with the experience born of six other annual and successful excursions, will attend to every detail calculated to secure the comfort of excursionists. Those desiring to spend a day of week in visiting Toronto at its best, have only to invest in a return ticket, good for eight days, at the absurdly low price of $2.15. Leaving Peterborough at 7 o'clock in the morning, in a first-class coach, you will reach Toronto at 10.30. Then you have the day—or week if you like—before you, to visit the city and see the sights. In addition to the ordinary attractions of the beautiful city, there will be a band competition in which half a hundred bands, numbering nearly a thousand performers will take part, and the grand street [illegible] and the [illegible] of $5,000 [illegible] uniformed [illegible] Add to this, for other tastes, the thrilling baseball match between the crack league nines, Rochester and Toronto, and with the same half dozen grand spectacular events in connection with the visit of the Knights of Pythias, you have a bill of fare of a magnitude and attractiveness never before presented. All this available to anyone patronizing the Foresters' excursion. Tickets for the round trip, good for eight days, only $2.15.

PARLIAMENTARY CANDIDATES.

At a convention of the Conservatives of the East Riding of Peterborough, held at Norwood, on June 9th, 1883, the following resolution was moved:

"Mr. R.C. Strickland moved, seconded by Mr. John Burnham, M. P.,—That Mr. John Moloney, Reeve of Dentro, be the candidate to contest the election for the Ottawa Legislature, in the interests of the Liberal Conservatives of East Peterborough."

According to the report of the proceedings as printed in the Review:—

"Both gentlemen spoke in eulogistic terms of their nominee, but Mr. Moloney expressed his inability to accept the nomination, as under his existing circumstances it was impossible for him to do so, at the same time expressing his thanks to the gentlemen who so kindly nominated him."

It would appear from this that Mr. Moloney enjoyed the confidence and esteem of the Conservatives of the East Riding to the point of receiving the most flattering, possible tribute to his popularity and fitness for the position. In the face of this fact, it is difficult to understand why the Review should fly in the face of the party and show such deliberate anxiety to drive Mr. Moloney out of the Conservative ranks. There is not the slightest ground, as far as we know, for the rumor that Mr. Moloney is likely to be a candidate in the Reform interests at the next elections. The rumour is made out of whole cloth and made current by the Review for purposes of its own, which it can best explain. Mr. Moloney is not a gentleman to thrust himself as a candidate upon the Conservative party and the local Tory organ should see some signs of his displacing some pet candidate whom it is desirious of pitchforking into the position of a candidate before it publicly pronounces the sentence of political ostracism upon Mr. Moloney.

Fatal Railway Accident

On the Missing Link—A Cow Butches An Engine and Nine Cars—Wm. Powell Killed, and Daniel Beard Seriously Scalded.

Another fatal accident occurred on the Missing Link last night. About 10 o'clock a special train, consisting chiefly of empty box cars, left town for Midland, in charge of Conductor Edward Pym. The train was running at a good rate nearing Omemee junction, as it was not intended to stop there, when at Laidley's crossing, about half a mile this side of the junction, the train ran into a cow which was lying on the track at the crossing. The cow was killed almost instantly, while the engine and nine cars were thrown from the track, and brought almost to a standstill by coco. Wm. Powell, who was brakeing at the fore part of the train, was thrown to the ground with such force that he was killed almost instantly, while Daniel Beard, fireman, was seriously scaled, The driver, George Edwards, escaped uninjured. Powell and Beard were both removed to Omemee, where the latter received medical attention. An inquest will be held this evening at Omemee over the remaids of Powell. Powell was a resident of Millbrook, and was a Batoche veteran, having served in "C" company of the Midland Battalion. He is the second of the same company who has been killed while braking. He was allowed to be one of the best boys on the line and was a general favorite with all his acquaintances. Beard belonged to Belleville and will be sent home this evening. After the accident occurred word was telegraphed to town. Auxiliary trains were sent from Port Hope and Lindsay to the scene of the accident, where they have been working all day. The extent of the damage done the engine is not known. All the trains had to round by Millbrook to-day. It is expected that the line will be open this evening.

LATER INFORMATION.

Information received from an Omemee correspondent states that the engineer did not see the cow on the track until within 20 or 30 feet from it. The engine left the track the moment it struck the cow, and after running a short distance, went over the embankment, turning upside down. The engineer, Harold [illegible], was badly disfigured, while six of the cars are almost total wrecks.

Gen. Fredericks, the engineer, held on to the throttle until the engine came to a full stop. Beard is more seriously scalded than was first supposed. He is now under the care of Dr. Morris.

Police Court.

R. N. Reddy Remanded for Trial on a Charge of Aggravated Assault—$200 Bail Accepted.

The hearing of the charge against R. N. Reddy for aggravated assault upon R. J. Sanders, was continued at the Police Court, yesterday afternoon.

For the defence John McInnis testified that he saw Sanders and Connell at Roddy's on Sunday evening. Both were intoxicated. He saw Sanders and Connell standing near the alleyway. One of them started suddenly and ran toward George street. At this time Roddy was in the hotel, and could not have struck the blow.

After hearing the evidence of several other witnesses, who testified as to Sanders' condition at the time, the magistrate committed the prisoner for trial at the next competent court of jurisdiction. Mr. Roddy was admitted to bail himself in $500 and two sureties in $250 each.

DISMISSED.

The charge against Lafayette Carpenter for unlawfully taking water from the Peterborough Water Company, was taken up.

Mr. Carpenter admitted the charge and explained that he had been informed by the town teamster and several other persons whom he thought should know, that he and all the citizens of the town had the privilege of using the water. The prosecution not wishing to press the charge, Mr. Carpenter was discharged with a caution.

PROFANITY.

Geo. Keys, was brought before the court charged by P. C. Adams, with profane swearing. He admitted the charge and was fined $2 and costs.

John Shaw was arraigned before the court on a charge of vagrancy preferred by P. C. McGinty. He admitted the charge and was sent up to jail for one month.

St. Paul's Pic-nic.

The excursion pic-nic of St. Paul's congregation and Sunday School to Hastings, yesterday, was probably the most successful ever given under the same auspices. The party left town about nine o'clock and arrived at Hastings shortly after eleven. The excursionists with baskets in their hands, proceeded across a field and through the woods to the beautiful pic-nic park, where preparations were immediately made for dinner. After dinner, the excursionists young and old gave themselves up to pleasure. Boating, bathing and croquet were the principal amusements. A number of energetic committees saw that all were well pleased with their holiday. The train arrived in town about 8 o'clock.

The British Elections.

LONDON, July 6.—The latest returns received last night show that out of a total of 670 members of the House of Commons, 395 seats have been elected. Of these 275 are Tories, 85 Unionists, 99 Gladstonians, and 42 Parnellites. There are 275 constituents yet to be heard from, and to secure even the small majority of twelve in the new Parliament, it will be necessary for the Gladstone party to carry two hundred of these seats.

Cape Breton Hospitality.

By noon-time we happened to meet two boys picking up shells; they said the shells were for burning to get lime for mending the chimney-corner. They invited us home to dinner, but we went on. Then came a troop of men and women from their hay field; none of them spoke to us at first, but after we had addressed them a few words, the father among them became more sociable, and he also asked us to dine. Still another group gave us an invitation, and at last we accepted it. Here was our first evidence of Cape Breton hospitality we had missed the previous evening; here people came seeking on the highway who might devour. The men sat down first, and the women served us with: beancocks and sour milk, potatoes and boiled salt mackerel, bread and butter. It was one of the best meals of our trip; for nine times out of ten we were given only the stape articles of diet—bread, butter, and bitter tea. The people spoke Gaelic to one another, and we got no hint of their talk; but the quiet and kindly spirit of the family sufficed to put us at ease. After dinner we dragged wearily onward, still toward Smoky, until at sundown we gladly entered a poor man's hut for the night. It was full of inhabitants, of which I can mention only the man and wife with nine small children, three dogs, a hen, and a pet pig. It was a shadowy little place, with a cavernous stone chimney, picturesque with pots and kettles hanging from a crane. The few dishes gleamed out of the dimness of a corner cupboard, and the table and chairs were unmistakably home-made. The woman had been in the hay field all day, but she cheerfully cooked our supper, and gave us the bed usually occupied by the children. The poor are always friendly with nature; the little pig regarded himself as one of the family; and whenever the woman went to get some milk from the pan kept in the bottom of the cupboard, there was a race between her, the pig squealing, and the hen with eager neck; the woman generally reached the door first, and then, with much scuffling, just managed to fence the others out with her legs, while they bobbed in and out under her skirts. From this excitement the pig would walk over to the hearth, and such was the comfort he took in the warmth of the fire that he would doze before he had time to lie down, and thus frequently fell asleep supported a while on four legs and his nose. I noted his habits, because the pig is sometimes a member of the household here in regard to bed and board. A minister at a wedding remained all night, and was given a low cot bed in the living-room. In the night he was startled at finding some one getting into his bed, and soon felt it to be the pig nestling down against his back. He tried to drive it out, but the outraged animal would not go. The noise of the fight brought the householder, and he explained that it was the habit of the pig to come into bed with them on cold nights, and assured the reverend gentleman that it would do no harm.—C. H. Farnham, in Harper's Magazine for March.

A Victoria merchant, who happened to see a photograph of a young lady living in Nova Scotia, thought the original an angel of loveliness, and, after a brief correspondence, sent for her. She made the long journey, but her personal appearance disenchanted him, and he refused to marry her. She has entered suit against him for $5,000 damages.

Pruning.

One of our chief aims is to form an evenly balanced, open, symmetrical head, and this can often be accomplished better by a little watchfulness during the season of growth than at any other time. If for instance, two branches start so closely together that one or the other must be removed in the spring pruning, why let the superfluous one grow at all? It is just so much wasted effort. By rubbing off the pushing bud or tender shoot the strength of the tree is thrown into the branches that we wish to remain. Thus the eye and hand of the master become to the young tree what instruction, counsel and admonition are to a growing boy, with the difference that the tree is easily and certainly managed when taken in time.

Trees left to themselves tend to form too much wood, like the grape-vine. Of course fine fruit is impossible when the head of a tree is like a thicket. The growth of unchecked branches follows the terminal bud, thus producing long naked reaches of wood devoid of fruit spurs. Therefore the need of shortening in, so that side branches may be developed. When the reader remembers that every dormant bud in early spring is a possible branch, and that even the immature buds at the axil of the leaves in early summer can be forced into immediate growth by pinching back the leading shoot, he will see how entirely the young tree is under his control. These simple facts and principles are worth far more to the intelligent man than any number of arbitrary rules as to the pruning. Reason and observation soon guide his hand in summer, or his knife in March, the season when trees are usually trimmed.

Beyond shortening in leading branches and cutting out crossing and interfering boughs, so as to keep the head symmetrical and open to light and air, the cherry does not need very much pruning. If with the lapse of years it becomes necessary to take off large limbs from any fruit-tree, the authorities recommend early June as the best season for the operation.—E. P. Roe, in Harper's Magazine for April.

Two bales of cotton raised by slave labor in 1862 were sold the other day at Rock Hill, S. C. The owner had been offered 33½ cents in gold a pound, but for some unknown reason would not sell, and when he died he still had it stored. It was in excellent condition, although twenty-four years old, and was sold for 8½ cents a pound, the lowest point touched by cotton since those bales were grown.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 7, 1886.

Hon. Mr. Bowell will act as Minister of the Interior during the absence of Hon. Mr. White in the Northwest and British Columbia.

THE Dominion Government are sending out surveyors to run lines, over the routes of several subsidised railway lines in Quebec Province in the hope of influencing coming Provincial election.

A CABLEGRAM from London announces that Sir John Rose, who has had charge of so many of the Canadian loans floated in England, has been made Privy Councillor by Queen Victoria.

MR. PARNELL has settled the question as to what church he belongs by answering a Canadian correspondent that "the religious denomination to which he belongs is the Episcopal Church of Ireland."

IN New York there are 10,000 licensed liquor saloons, one to every 150 inhabitants, or one to every 39 adult males. In one locality there are 35 in one block, in another 41 in two blocks.

SERIOUS charges have been made against four members of the Dominion Parliament, by the Montreal Trade Bulletin, a non-political commercial journal. The gist of the charges —which it is understood, include a member or two of the Dominion Cabinet—is that these four representatives and guardians of the public interests, accepted a bribe of $4000, as the reward for their efforts in securing a settlement satisfactory to the merchants making false entries and undervaluation of dutiable goods imported by them. The general belief, in commercial circles, in Montreal, is that the charges are true, and, from the revelations made last session of the purchasable character of the majority of the Government supporters, the general public can have no doubt of the possibility as well as the probability of their being true. Prompt investigation by an impartial tribunal should be made—if the charges are false, the credit of the country should be maintained by showing that our public men are not as vendible as a street drab; if they are true, the walls of the penitentiary should close round the quartette, be they members of Sir John Macdonald's Government, or members of the party supporting him in Parliament. The charges have been plainly made and, moreover, reiterated. Nothing but absolute proof or disproof will satisfy the public.

The First Pacific Through Train Completes Its Journey.

Triumphant Reception at Port Moody—Ovations All Along the Line—Addresses of Congratulation Presented—The Train Sharp on Time Throughout.

PORT MOODY, B.C., July 4, via Winnipeg, July 6.—The first through train from the Eastern Provinces, which left Montreal last Monday evening, June 28th, arrived here this morning sharp on time. There was a very large turn-out, numbers of people coming from Victoria and other parts of Vancouver Island to witness the arrival. This town was gaily decorated, but Coal Harbor, (Vancouver City), a few miles farther down the inlet, which is the Pacific terminus, is still in mourning over the fire, which literally swept it out of existence. Addresses were presented to the railway officials from the corporations of Victoria, Moody, New Westminster and Vancouver City, congratulating them and the people of Canada upon the completion of their gigantic enterprise. Mr. Harry Abbott, who has charge of the British Columbia division of the road, replied on behalf of the company. Great enthusiasm was displayed on every hand.

EN ROUTE.

The train officials received an enthusiastic welcome at all the points between this and Winnipeg. At Kamloops there was great rejoicing, with addresses and speeches. The train ran right on time all the way from Montreal to the Pacific, the British Columbia section being pronounced a first-class road. The people of Northern Oregon take a keen interest in the Canadian Pacific, and are already talking of constructing branch lines to it.

The fortnightly market of the Peterborough and Victoria Cheese Board was held in the Music Hall here yesterday afternoon. The number of boxes boarded was 2,458, the largest number offered at any market this season. Mr. Clarkton led off by offering 6c. for the entire board. Mr. Cook offered 6⅛c. for selections, and Mr. Leary 6⅛c. for the entire board. Mr. Wrighton 7c. for the offerings of the Peterborough factories. Mr. Flavelle bid 6 15-16c. for Victoria factories make, the offerings of Victoria factories. Mr. Clarkton offered 7 1-16c. for selections, which was not accepted as a bid, it being contrary to the rules of the board to accept 1-16 of a Mr. Leary then increased his bid to 7c. for cent advance on selections. The bids of Messrs. Wrighton and Leary were accepted, the former taking the offerings of the Peterborough factories, with the exception of 25 boxes, retained by the Westwood factory, and Mr. Leary taking the make of Lindsay factories.

Young's Point.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

BASEBALL MATCH.

On Thursday evening the Young's Point baseball club played an unfinished game with a picked team of the Lakefield and Pine Grove clubs on the ground of the latter. The game was to have been with the Pine Grove club, but when our boys arrived on the field they were surprised to learn that six of Lakefield's best baseballists were going to play. The following were the players and their positions on the field:

LAKEFIELD.		YOUNG'S POINT.
D Pilkey	catcher	J A Johnston
— Cox	pitcher	T N Lee
— Sherin	1st base	J Ballegham
J Watson	2nd base	R Heard
— Brown	3rd base	F J Young
R Watson	short stop	W Plymith
— Abbot	right field	W Scollard
— Morrison	centre field	W Young
— Jury	back stop	D Godfrey

Ed. Fitzgerald of Young's Point acted as umpire.

The ground being rough and the ball batted out of bounds several times prevented good fielding. At the conclusion of play the score stood 20 to 24 in favor of Lakefield, with an innings to spare. When Young's Point went to the bat for the last time, the score stood 6 to 24, but before they retired they succeeded in piling up 14 more runs to their credit.

NEW GROUND.

The baseball club have been considerably hampered by want of proper ground to practice on, but Mr. Geo. J. Chalmers has kindly placed at their disposal, a field convenient to the village, which answers the purpose. Mr. Chalmers deserves the thanks of the club.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

So time passed, and she was unconscious of it, until a shadow falling over the great white lilies warned her that some one was near.

Looking up quickly, she saw a tall, fair, handsome young man gazing at her with mingled admiration and surprise. Beside him stood Sir Oswald, courtly, gracious, and evidently on the alert.

"Captain Langton," he said, "let me introduce you to my niece, Miss Darrell."

Not one feature of the girl's proud, beautiful face moved, but there was some little curiosity in her dark eyes. They rested for a moment on the captain's face, and then, with a dreamy look, she glanced over the heads of the white lilies behind him. He was not her ideal, not her hero, evidently. In that one keen, quick glance, she read not only the face, but the heart and soul of the man before her.

The captain felt as though he had been subjected to some wonderful microscopic examination.

"She is one of those dreadfully shrewd girls that pretend to read faces," he said to himself, while he bowed low before her, and replied with enthusiasm to the introduction.

"My niece is quite a Darrell," said Sir Oswald, proudly. "You see she has the Darrell face."

Again the gallant captain offered some flattering remark—a neatly turned compliment, which he considered ought to have brought her down, as a skillful shot does a bird—but the dark eyes saw only the lilies, not him.

"She is proud, like all the Darrells," he thought, "my father always said they were the proudest race in England."

"I hope," said Sir Oswald, courteously, "that you will make a visit here, Aubrey. Your father was my dearest friend, and it gives me great delight to see you here."

"I am sure I do, Sir Oswald. I am equally happy; I can see how any one could be dull for one minute in this grand old place."

Sir Oswald's face flushed with pleasure, and for the first time the dark eyes slowly left the lilies and looked at the captain.

"Only one minute, but many hearts might be dull," said Pauline. "The old house looks somber without Miss Darrell Court," he hastened, with a bow which seemed to embrace Sir Oswald, his niece, and all his possessions.

"You like it—in what way?" asked Pauline, in her gracefully downright manner. "It is your first visit, and you have been here only a few hours. How can you tell whether you like it?"

For a few moments Captain Langton looked slightly confused, and then he rallied. Surely a man of the world was not to be foiled by a mere girl.

"I have seen that at Darrell Court," he said deferentially, "which will make the place dear to me while I live."

She did not understand him. She was far too frank and haughty for a compliment so broad. But Sir Oswald smiled.

"He is losing no time," thought the stately old baronet; "he is falling in love with her, just as I guessed he would."

"I will leave you," said Sir Oswald, "to get better acquainted. Pauline, you will show Captain Langton the aviary."

"Yes," she assented, carelessly. "But will you send Miss Hastings here? She knows the various birds far better than I do."

Sir Oswald, with a pleased expression on his face, walked away.

"So you have an aviary at the Court, Miss Darrell. It seems to me there is nothing wanting here. You do not seem interested; do you not like birds?"

"Not caged ones," she replied. "I love birds almost as though they were living friends, but not bright-plumaged birds in golden cages. They should be free and wild in woods and forests, filling the summer air with joyous song. I love them well then."

"You like unrestricted freedom?" he observed.

"I do not merely like it, I deem it an absolute necessity. I should not care for life without it."

The captain looked more attentively at her. It was the Darrell face, surely enough—features of perfect beauty, with a soul of fire shining through them.

"Yes," he said, musingly, cautiously feeling his way, "there is but little freedom—true freedom—for women. They are bound down by a thousand narrow laws and observances—caged by a thousand restraints."

"There is no power on earth," she returned, hastily, "that can control thoughts or souls or souls; while they are free, it is untrue to say that there is no freedom."

A breath of fragrant wind came and stirred the largest white lilies. The gallant captain said that he should only lose by attempting to vie with her.

"Shall we visit the aviary?" he asked.

And she walked slowly down the path, he following.

"She is like an empress," he thought. "It will be all the more glory for me if I can win such a wife for my own."

CHAPTER VII.

THE BROKEN LILY.

Pauline Darrell was a close, shrewd observer of character. She judged more by small actions than by great ones; it was a characteristic of hers. When women have that gift, it is more to be dreaded than the cool, calm, matured judgment of men. Men err sometimes in their estimate of character, but it is very seldom that a woman makes a similar mistake.

The garden path widened where the tall white lilies grew in rich profusion, and there Pauline and Captain Langton walked side by side. The rich, sweet perfume seemed to gather round them, and the dainty flowers, with their silvery leaves and golden hearts, looked like great white stars.

Captain Langton carried a small cane in his hand. He had begun to talk to Pauline with great satisfaction. Her proud indifference piqued him. He was accustomed to the admiration of women, and he resolved that he would make her care for him, that the proud, dark eyes should soften and brighten for him; and he gave his whole mind to the enterprise. As he [illegible] one of the tall, white lilies [illegible] path; with one touch of the cane [illegible] down, gave a [illegible] pained her; ped, and taking the slender green [illegible] her head, straightened [illegible] drooping of the white leaves.

"Why did you do that?" she asked, pained voice.

"It is only a flower," he [illegible] laugh.

"Only a flower! You have killed [illegible] cannot make it live again. Why need you have cut its sweet life short?"

"It could not be suffered from among so many," he said.

"Cruelties are only three things of yourself," she retorted. "The world is full of men and you would hardly be missed from so many; yet you would not like——"

"The same little [illegible] Darrell," he interrupted, [illegible]

"There is, indeed; and the flowers have the advantage," she retorted.

The captain calmed himself by twisting his mustache and relieved his feelings by [illegible] Darrell did not fear. In her quick, impulsive way, she judged him at once.

"He is cruel and selfish," she thought; "he would not even stoop to save the life of the sweetest flower that blows. He shall not forget killing that lily," she continued, as she gathered the broken chalice, and placed it in her belt. "Every time he looks at me," she said, "he shall remember what he has done."

The captain evidently understood her amiable intention, and fitted her accordingly. They walked on for some minutes in perfect silence; then Pauline turned to him suddenly.

"Have you been long in the army, Captain Langton?"

Flattered by a question that seemed to evince some personal interest, he hastened to reply:

"More than eight years. I joined when I was twenty."

"Have you seen any service?" she asked.

"No," he replied. "My regiment had been for many years in active service just before I joined, so that we have been at home since then."

"Inglorious ease," she said.

"Or hard work," he returned, "when work comes."

"How do you employ your time?" she asked; and again he was flattered by the interest that the question showed. His face flushed. Here was a grand opportunity of showing this haughty girl, this proud Darrell of Darrell all that he was, and sought after in society such as she had not yet seen.

"You have no conception of the immense number of engagements that occupy our time," he replied; "Lady [illegible] figures [illegible] and an interest in all faces."

If he had added that he was one of the greatest gamblers on the turf, he would have spoken truthfully.

"Hunting," said Miss Darrell, "that is the favorite occupation of all English gentlemen, is it not?"

"I should imagine so. Then I am considered—you must pardon my boasting—one of the best billiard players in London."

"That is not much of a boast," she remarked, with such quiet contempt that the captain could only look at her in sheer wonder.

"There are balls, operas, parties, suppers—I cannot tell what; and the ladies engross a great deal of our time. We soldiers never forget our devotion and chivalry to the fair sex, Miss Darrell."

"The fair sex should be grateful that they share your attention with horses and billiards," she returned. "But what else do you do, Captain Langton? I was not thinking of such trifles as these."

"Trifles!" he repeated. "I do not call horse racing a trifle. I was within an inch of winning the Derby—I mean to say a horse of mine was. If you call that a trifle, Miss Darrell, you go near to upsetting Englishmen's ideas altogether."

William Fulton, a member of the Iona Band, was badly burned by the explosion of a torch attached to his helmet.

Bishopsgate Warning.

"Tried in the balance and found wanting" is the general verdict rendered in nine cases of the so-called cures for lung troubles. Such a decision has never been given against Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." On the contrary, it is conceded by thousands who have tried it, to be the only remedy for consumption, (scrofula of the lungs) and scrofulous diseases generally. It will not cure when both lungs are most gone, but if taken when the disease is in the first stages it never fails. It is also specific for such scrofulous affections as fever-sores, white swellings, hip-joint disease, and great eating ulcers, and for blood taints generally, from whatever cause arising. Father Sweeney's Pic-nic.

The steamer Golden Eye will carry excursionists from Peterborough to Rev. Father Sweeney's pic-nic at Harwood to-morrow, leaving her wharf at 8 a.m. Martin's quadrille band will be in attendance.

Improvements to the G. T. R. Station.

The woodwork of the G. T. R. station has been toned up with an artistic coat of paint, which adds materially to the beauty of the building. The freight sheds, besides being treated in a like manner, have been extended fifty feet south, which addition was found necessary to give the required accommodation.

St. Luke's Church.

The Lord Bishop of Toronto, will administer the rite of confirmation in St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, on Friday next, at 3 p. m. The Bishop will also preach a sermon at an evening service on the same day, it being the 10th anniversary of the parish. This service will be held at 8 o'clock. All are cordially invited.

Will Play With Cobourg.

Mr. J. E. Hammond, on behalf of the local cricket club, has made arrangements with the Cobourg cricket club to play a match at Cobourg on Friday next. The local club will send a strong team to play the Cobourgers, who are said to be a rattling good team. A lively game and a good time is expected.

Market Items.

The market was slightly below the average this morning. Fruits were the principal offerings and made a fine display. Prices were quoted as follows: Butter, 13 to 15c.; eggs, 10c. for shipment, and 11 to 12c. for local use; black currants, 12½c. per quart; red currants, gooseberries and cherries, 10c. per quart; beans, 5c. per quart; new potatoes, 50c. per peck.

An Efficient Deputy.

This morning Mr. H. W. Watson received from the R. W. H. C. R. of the Canadian Order of Foresters, Mr. Robt. Elliott, his commission as District Deputy High Chief Ranger for Peterborough. This is the third year Mr. Watson has been appointed to this position, a fact that emphatically expresses the high estimation in which his services are held. All who know him will agree that he is, by virtue of zeal and loyalty to the interests of the Order, worthy of the recognition implied in his repeated re-appointment to so responsible a position.

Three Straights for Hastings.

Messrs. K. Kincaid, R. Parnell, S. Hendron, M. Larone, H. Wiltse, W. Armstrong, F. Larone, J. Allan, J. Sanderson, H. Foot, A. Carter and J. Canning, of the Crete Lacrosse Club, were defeated yesterday at Hastings by three straight games. The game lasted over two hours, the first game occupying one hour, the second about half an hour, and the third about three quarters of an hour. The Hastings players on the average were much larger than the Cretes, and probably were better practiced. The ground was very rough—as the boys say a pig pasture. Although rough and ready in the field, the Hastings boys were very hospitable to their visitors. A return match is expected.

Peterborough Slighted.

An advertisement appears in a Cobourg paper for horses for the purposes of the British Army, addressed to the horse-owners of every one-horse town in the district. Peterborough does not come under this description, therefore, the horse breeders of this county, who raise the best horses in Canada, are not called on. Why is this town thus slighted, and why does our ornamental Minister of Militia ignore this county? Why is it that the member for the West Riding doesn't see that the farmers of this county get a chance to get fancy prices for their horses as well as other parts of the district? Does he want to take the pick for his lumber camps, or what is the reason that, both is, as well as every other one, he neglects the interests of his constituents?

True Blue's Meeting.

A special meeting of the True Blues will be held in their hall on Wednesday evening, at 8 o'clock. All members are requested to attend.—Percy W. Weir, W. M.

Millbrook.

St. Andrew's Church Sabbath School picnic at Millbrook on Thursday, July 15th. Train will leave the G. T. R. station at 11.55 a.m., returning leave Millbrook at 7 p.m. Tickets 40c.; children 25c.

Cow Poisoned.

A valuable cow owned by Mr. E. Dunford died yesterday afternoon in the field in which it was pastured. On examination it was found that Paris green was the cause of the animal's death, but how it got the poison is a mystery.

Burning of a Boiler.

Albert Webster, employed at Knox's soda water works, had his left wrist badly cut yesterday by the bursting of a soda water bottle, which he was filling. Dr. Fife was summoned and dressed the wound.

Court House Park Litter.

Court House Park is the brightest, trimmest, neatest, coolest resort in town and it is disgraceful to note the way it is littered with paper, lunch bags, bottles and other rubbish left by "tasty" and pic-nic parties. The litter disfigures the lawn and the bottles become broken and the fragments are death on lawn mowers. The Horticultural Society have spent large sums of money in making the place a pleasant resort for our citizens and the least the Town Council can do is to instruct their officials to see to it that it is not made hideous and unsightly by the natures above indicated.

Street Loading.

The contrast of the manner in which police duty is now performed, with that of the new regime, strikingly suggests the "new broom" proverb. Numerous complaints are made of the habit of persons lounging in the doorways of George street and sitting on every projecting window seat, sometimes breaking glass, ejecting tobacco spittle, embarrassing timid ladies, and generally creating a nuisance. It is the duty of the police to see that this sort of thing is not allowed. With two parks within a stone's cast, there is no excuse for allowing such objectionable practices in our principal street. Let an example be made of persistent offenders, and if the police are not equal to the task of running them in, they might be driven down in a phaeton.

Agricultural Society Buildings.

A meeting of the Directors of the West Riding Central Exhibition Society, was held on the Park grounds last night. It was decided to erect for present use, one wing of the proposed buildings, 60 x 30 feet, two stories in height, with two annexes one story in height and fifteen feet wide. The buildings are to be begun at once and work will be pushed as rapidly as possible. Tenders will be called for in a day or two. The buildings will be placed sufficiently far back, so that when the proposed plans of the buildings are completed, the front will be 140 feet from the front fence of the enclosure. The present buildings are only for use in the meantime, the whole to be built as soon as the finances of the society will admit of it. The second floor of the building decided on, will be devoted to the display of ladies' work and fine art exhibits and the first floor for roots, vegetables and dairy products.

Sunday School Excursion.

St. Luke's Sunday School pic-nic and excursion, held yesterday, was a pronounced success, the attendance being larger than former years. The train left the Ashburnham station at 9.20 a.m. and soon reached Lakefield. Here it was found that owing to a large drive of logs near Clear Lake, the Steamer Cruiser would find it impossible to reach the proposed pic-nic ground with scow attached. Arrangements however had been made to use a splendid grove at the Point should this occur, and soon every boat, canoeskiff, punt, &c., at Lakefield was pressed into the service, and eager hands plied oar and paddle until all the party had been transferred from the wharf to the grounds. Here shade was plentiful and all went to work to prepare dinner. During the afternoon the children had a delightful time on the river and the day passed quickly. When the Lakefield side of the river was reached again in the evening, the usual programme of games was carried out, resulting as follows:—

1. Infant Class—30 yard race—1st, Walter Roberts, 2nd, Henry Starr.
2. Hop, Step and Jump—Boys under 15 years of age—1st, Roland Wilson.
3. Hop, Step and Jump—Boys over 15 years of age—1st, Robert Wilson.

MIKADO.

Wednesday and Thursday, July 7th and 8th

Personal.

Rev. R. F. Torrance left town this morning for England. He will spend two months in visiting England and Scotland.

Mr. Geo. H. Robinson, agent of Forepaugh's circus, is in in town completing preliminary arrangements for the exhibition which will take place in Riverside Park, August 25th.

Mr. J. H. Roper, manager of the Bank of Toronto, leaves to-day for Prince Edward Island, where he will spend a month's holidays at Brackley Point, on the north shore of the Island.

Not only is Mr. W. H. Hill personally successful as an insurance agent, but he is fortunate in securing able assistants. For the Bowmanville branch of his Sun Life agency, he has secured the services of Mr. J. L. Margach, late principal of the public schools of Brockville. The estimation in which Mr. Margach is held is shown by the fact that on his departure for Bowmanville he was presented with a complimentary address and a handsome easy chair, by his fellow teachers, and he received a similar mark of esteem from the pupils only a day or two previously.

Mr. J. H. Paterson, who has long been connected with the local dry goods firm of Fair, VanEvery & Co., and late with Mr. R. Fair, concludes his engagement with Mr. Fair this week, and leaves on Monday morning for Toronto, to enter upon the duties of a lucrative position he has been appointed to in the wholesale house of Wyld, Brock & Darling in that city. Mr. Paterson during his residence in Peterborough, by his courteous geniality and personal good qualities, has made many friends, who with the Examiner will be pleased at his promotion, though reluctant to lose so excellent a citizen of the town.

A Domestic Broil.

What was almost a tragedy took place on Rubidge street last night. As the case will come before the court to-morrow, names are withheld for the present. The bottom facts will then come out, but what is known may be stated. At about 7 o'clock a lady was seen coming from towards town in an excited condition. As she went in at the gate of her residence, she seized a lacrosse stick from her little boy who was just coming out. She then made directly for her husband who lay, reading, in a hammock, and began belaboring him over the head with the stick. Being surprised and in an almost helpless condition in the hammock, he shouted for help. A man who saw the whole scene from across the street interfered, but not before the husband had got two severe cuts, one on the head and the other on the cheek. It appears the lady had been down town and heard of disgraceful conduct on her husband's part. At breakfast hot words had passed over a visit the wife wanted to make in company with her husband, and the outraged wife had heard down town that her husband had, while leaving her out in the cold, bought a ticket for the Foresters' excursion to Toronto, July 13th. The operation will be an enjoyable one that the wife felt outraged and acted as described. And it served the husband right. If man who would rob his wife of the enjoyment the excursion will afford, is a brute.

Police Court.

Scott Act Cases and a Crowded Court Room.

The police court room was well filled with visitors this morning, a large number of whom were before the Court in Scott Act cases. Five cases were set down for hearing to-day. The first case called was, in which Wm. Kearns and Patrick Kearns of Burleigh, were charged by Inspector Cochrane, with unlawfully keeping for sale intoxicating liquor between the 4th and 27th of June.

QUEEN VS. KEARNS,

Mr. Geo. Edmison appeared for the defendants and Mr. R. E. Weed for the Crown.

Both defendants pleaded not guilty.

Patrick Kearns, was sworn and testified that he lived at Burleigh. There was a boarding house there owned by Kearns. He had no interest in the boarding house nor had his father. It was owned by his brother, who is in jail. He managed the house in his brother's absence. He managed the bar, but only sold soft drinks.

Alfonso Cuseon, testified that he had been [illegible] Kearns' house. He asked Kearns if he could get him some liquor. Kearns said he could not sell him any, but would give him his some. Kearns told him where he could meet him. Kearns met him about half a mile from his house and gave him two bottles of whiskey. He made a bargain with Kearns that if he would give him some liquor he would pay an old debt for board. He paid Kearns six dollars. Kearns took the whiskey from a basket with [illegible] in it. He did not get any liquor from Kearns between June 4th and July 3rd.

To Mr. Edmison the witness stated that according to Kearns' reckoning he owed him $8.

Mrs. Alfonso Cuseon, testified that her husband brought some liquor home on Monday, which he said he got from Mrs. Kearns, whom he said, made him a present of the liquor. She had seen men coming out of Kearns' intoxicated.

Alfonso Cuseon, recalled,—stated that on Tuesday he was out driving with Kearns; when Kearns left him he left a bottle of whiskey in a bag in the waggon. He saw Kearns put it there. There was nothing then said about payment.

S. Tassie, testified that he visited Kearns' boarding house [illegible] Paddy Kearns appeared to be running the place. He was there on Sunday a week ago and was given a drink of intoxicating liquors. Patrick Kearns served him. It was paid for.

Another witness gave evidence testifying that he received liquor from Patrick Kearns, for which he paid.

Patrick Kearns being recalled, at his own request, stated that he only put ginger beer and gave the intoxicating liquor with it.

The magistrate found Patrick Kearns guilty and imposed a fine of $50 and costs.

QUEEN VS. MILLER.

The case of Queen vs. Miller, [illegible] Conrane with selling liquor [illegible] on Thursday, June 17th, was called and enlarged till Monday at 10 o'clock.

The court then adjourned till three o'clock, when charges against Daly Bros. and F. Foucher on similar charges, will come up for hearing.

IN A HOT PLACE.

Interesting Account of Travel, a Correspondent Interviews a Veteran in Full Blast.

H. S. Jordan writes to the Chicago Inter-Ocean from Kohala, Hawaii: The proper name of this great crater is Kilauea and it is situated on the southern slope of the Mauna Loa Mountain, some several thousand feet below the apex. The crater proper is nine miles in circumference and about six hundred feet deep. The floor of this crater is covered with black lava, and every few weeks or months it receives a new coating. This floor is as uneven as the waves of the restless ocean. The descent into the crater is made by a path cut down and alongside of this great Falt. On leaving the house the excursionist is provided with stout staff and a lantern. The guide precedes the company with staff, lantern, and a large caution of water. The volcano proper lies two and one-half miles from the outer rim of the crater. The trip across the lava-sea be made with reasonable safety during the daytime, but woe to the traveler who will wait have the guide even in daylight. That lava is fearfully treacherous, for what seems safe one moment may next prove a great hole or chasm. The truly Hawaiian who has crossed that crater for years knows the result of each flow.

The approach to the volcano was made from the safest side on account of the treacherous wind, which is apt to veer and smother you with sulphurous smoke. If at any time you are overtaken the guide drops upon his knees, opens that canteen, calls for your handkerchief, and thoroughly wetting, puts it across your mouth, exclaiming, "nole pilikia"—no danger. There are three orifices out of which at times pour molten lava. "Lua Hou," The New Lake: "Halemaumau, the home of everlasting fire, and Pele, Thereof, alias The Little Beggar, so named because it draws its supply from the New Lake. Halemaumau is the oldest lake and has a circumference of about a mile.

IT HAS FOR UNKNOWN YEARS

been at work, and upon two sides has great walls, scores of feet high, leaving one opening and a second in case of great eruptions. The new lake lies to the east about half a mile, and is nearly round and has a diameter of not less than eighty rods. This lake has thrown an embankment all around itself probably fifteen feet high, and is constantly heightening it by lava flows. When this lake becomes active it throws red-lava over this wall with a recklessness that is truly reprehensible. The Little Beggar is situated quite a distance from the new lake; it looks like a lighthouse built out of the remains of the great Chicago fire. It has an opening on the side, near the apex, and out of this constantly dart the fiery tongues of this subterranean hell.

During the eruption the molten lava bolshes out of this opening at an incredible rate. Pele was the ancient god of the Hawaiians, and because this was throat shaped it was called the throat of a god. Strange to say many of the natives still cling to their old superstitions anent the volcano. The race is peculiarly superstitious. All that religion, education, and science have done has not thoroughly eliminated it. The Rev. Mr. Oleson, of the Hilo Boys' Boarding School, records with great gusto that he and thirty boys slept in the crater, and the boys evinced not a particle of superstition. The Hawaiians used to offer sacrifices to this great god, and some of them still observe that custom despite the ridicule heaped upon the heads of the devotees. Not long ago a native woman, widely known in the island, a member of the church and having royal blood in her veins, came to offer sacrifice. She brought a pig, two roosters, some taro-poi, and various other articles. The lake at this time was enerusted, the fire having temporarily subsided. The pig was tied and heaved over into the black lava.

IT WAS A HOT PLACE.

The protest of the pig was grateful to the god and appeasing to the woman's conscience. The roosters did not take so philosophical and religious a view of the matter. Evidently they had somewhere got a taste of the "New Theology," and flopped about until they broke their fastenings and then flew away. The natives were frightened out of their wits, believing that some awful catastrophe was at hand; but that god must be appeased and they gave stern chase to those plucky unbelievers, caught and fastened them securely, and as the lake again broke up they were cast into the fiery depths and swallowed up by that burning that never ceases. If this woman had been an ignorant religionse we might charitably have said that she mixed her theology very badly, but the fact is she was well educated in English and an intelligent woman. It is safe to be considered as true the ignorant natives regarded this home of everlasting fire as a god. No intelligent man can approach this great wonder of nature without more fully believing in Genesis I.:1. The reverent student of nature and science looks upon this mighty volcano and exclaims in the words of the book of books, "In wisdom Thou hast made them all."

The volcano is not always active. Sometimes it quite dies down. A few years ago Halemaumau sank down and it was impossible with the naked eye to see the bottom. Ordinarily this is not true. The fire falls away several feet from the top of the lake—and at that point the lava cools sufficiently to allow the formation of a crust of lava. It looks like dirty snow, here and there red-hot lines four or five inches wide extending across the crater. This usually lasts about one hour and a half. Then this black crust begins to rise like a large leviathan out of the sea. It is highly frightful to look upon.

THEN THE FIRE BURSTS OUT

in grand columns and jets, throwing great sheets of molten lava into the air. The sound is similar to the swish and swash of the waves of the ocean. When the volcano is [illegible] the whole [illegible] seem to be the fire and the devil [illegible] the doorway for [illegible] from the [illegible] their fiery [illegible] sending out [illegible]

[illegible] exhausted yet terrible to behold. This work goes on unceasingly. What is to be the future of this apparently gathering force no human can tell. The fires are being pent up; they are exhibiting an awful restlessness that will not always submit to restraint. They undoubtedly will gather force until at last the top of Mauna Loa will be blown heavenward and the dwellers of this fair isle will be as hopelessly buried beneath [illegible] and stones as was Pompeii in the days when the finger of Vesuvius was satisfied only by the death of every living thing within its grasp.

Near by this great volcano are vast craters that indicate the dying down of eruptive fires until the gathering of their forces at this given central point. Into one of these craters about 2,000 feet deep, the writer and our Union soldier descended, and so far as is now known this dead volcano [illegible] ever trod, the floor of that extinct crater, Kileau Iki or Kilean dead. Then a fearful and dangerous climb out, a little further [illegible] monument, and the journey is complete.

Since the above was written telegraphic advices from the Sandwich Islands state that volcanic phenomena, which were accompanied by a large number of shocks of earthquake, resulted in the total disappearance of New Lake and Halemaumau, two pits in the crater of the volcano Kilauea, and the extinction of the fire in them. These phenomena are believed to be the precursors of a grand outburst in the near future, either in Kilauea or Mauna Loa. Some, basing their views on the observations of Prof. Agassiz, believe the disappearance of the fire is a prelude to the extinction of Kilauea.

"Rucus" is a new word lately added to the Texan language, and signifies a lively time of the Donnybrook Fair variety.

Jersey Weather-Lore.

That which I have heard, and have recorded from time to time, appears to have originated where now, or where it lately was, in use. To a great extent, I believe it to be original with the descendants of the immigrants that settled Central New Jersey and the country generally about Philadelphia; but a portion of it, very possibly, was derived from the Indians.

At present, a portion of this weather-lore is repeated as nursery rhymes, and it is due to this that it has been preserved to the present time; and, so far as I have been able to determine, not one of the rhymes or sayings has ever been published. That among the earliest papers and almanacs of the country there may be found some of them, or slightly different versions of the same, is probable, but my searchings therefor, in the larger libraries, have not resulted in any such discoveries.

The main interest, however, in connection with weather-lore, is to determine whether they do or do not correctly represent the relationship of the animals mentioned to the given condition of the weather. In other words, is the zoology of the weather-lore misrepresented or not? I am forced to declare that, as a rule, those who by virtue of their ingenuity framed these rhymes and brief sayings did not correctly interpret nature.

Very many of the early English settlers were, no doubt, excellent observers; but they appear, at times, to have more desired to be looked upon as weather-prophets than as naturalists, and strove to have glib nonsense-sayings pass current as evidence of their wisdom, instead of taking pains to correctly interpret the course of nature and determine the relation of animal life to its environment.

Often, during my rambles in the neighborhood, I have questioned the few remaining descendants of the original settlers concerning the local weather-proverbs, and I find the impression is still prevalent that the purport of all these sayings is substantially correct, and therefore, to a great degree, that my neighbors are laboring under erroneous impressions. "Is there not wisdom in a multitude of counselors?" they ask; and I, standing alone, am voted the fool, while they pose as sages.

Let us consider this weather-lore, bit by bit, as I have gathered it from time to time, and discuss its merits, if it has any, and also its absurdities.—Dr. C. C. Abbott, in Popular Science Monthly for March.

The girl of the period now carries her hands in her overcoat pocket just like a man—partly because it's English, and partly, doubtless, because there are holes in her gloves.—Lowell Citizen.

THURSDAY, JULY 8, 1886.

YOUNG LIBERALS' PLATFORM.

The following is the platform of the Young Liberals, as embodied in the resolution adopted at the Montreal convention:

Provincial control of the Franchise.

Condemnation of the Dominion Government's Northwest policy.

A plebescite on prohibition and Dominion temperance enactments.

Condemnation of the Dominion Government's Indian policy.

The right to make our own commercial treaty.

Removal of the taxes on flour, coal and other necessaries of life, and on raw material for manufacture.

Abolition of the Senate.

Home Rule for Ireland.

No assisted immigration.

Conduct of the fishery negotiations on the lines recommended by the authorities.

Repeal of the Dominion Franchise Act.

Abolition of the Dominion veto power.

Boards of arbitration for the settlement of labor difficulties.

The right of Manitoba to charter railways within its boundaries.

Abolition of the superannuation and the granting of pensions to members of the Civil Service.

The public lands for actual settlers only.

The handing over of the lands of Manitoba to the Province on such conditions as are just and equitable.

Persons seeking or receiving pecuniary advantage from the Government disqualified to sit in parliament.

Bribery at elections punishable by imprisonment without the option of a fine.

A Civil Service independent of political parties, honest and rigid examinations, and discontinuance of the practice of importing from abroad, men to fill positions in the public service.

Condemnation and repeal of the Dominion Gerrymander of 1882.

Trade reciprocity with the United States.

Two cent postage.

THE Tory idea of independence of Parliament is illustrated by the fact that Senator Clemow, is President of the company that is seeking a contract for the construction of the Northwest Central Railway. Like the member for West Toronto he is looking after a trifle for the "boys."

A CURRENT news item states:—"Rameses III, has been dug out of a tomb near Cairo, tolerably well preserved." If the royal Egyptian's nose is of sufficient integrity to admit of his taking snuff, it is understood that he will be made Dominion Senator, to fill some of the vacancies now existing.

THE best proof that the Young Men's Liberal Convention in Montreal was a thorough success, aptly points out the Hamilton Times, is to be found in the fact that the Tory fossils are thoroughly disgusted with the resolutions passed. If the deliberations of the young men had met with approval of the Tory organs, there would have been good reason to suspect that the young men had failed to do their duty.

THE Franchise Act is not all bad. Through its agency John Charles Rykert and son, of St. Catharines, have been deprived of bogus votes they have been casting for years for Tory candidates in the town of Thorold, Welland county. John Charles professed to be tenant of the lot, but it came out in evidence before the Revising Officer that it was an unfenced, vacant lot for which he had not paid any rent. Both names, hopeless father and hopeful son, were struck off.

THE Montreal Herald announces that a St. John merchant entered at the Custom House the other day an invoice of sugar. The cost of the sugar was $92; the duty exacted by the Customs authorities was $36.35. Our Canadian house-wives, especially in the fruit-canning and preserving season, will blame the N. P. Government for giving them cheap sugar. The sugar they could get, if the cost only was considered, for 92 cents, under the N. P. costs them 33½ cents extra, or $1.30 or about double. The N. P. is a great boon to the poor man.

A six week's old infant was left at the house of Mr. S. Francis, of Houghton, recently, nicely packed in a basket with fine clothes and $15 in cash. A letter in the basket stated the babe was born on April 25, and requested it to be called Ethel. Mr. Francis kept the infant and complied with the request.

ROME, July 7.—Cholera returns yesterday—Brindisi, 11 new cases, 7 deaths. Francavilla and Fortana 82 cases, 35 deaths. Latiano, 58 cases, 26 deaths. One case is reported at Venice. The Popola Romana asserts that the official figures are lower than the actual figures.

"Bull" Movement in Wheat.

CHICAGO, July 7.—The "bull" movement in wheat was continued yesterday. The sudden change to a season of intense activity from one of settled dullness caused hundreds of members to regret the rashness that caused them to seek a summer respite from the afternoon session. Not a few express regret that some power was not vested in the President at once to re-establish an afternoon session. There is on every hand the utmost confidence that the "bull" movement has come to stay, and that the tendency will be rapidly upward. It is reported that the bucket shops are 16,500,000 bushels short to their customers.

A little girl who has seen but twelve summers was in the Police Court, yesterday, on the complaint of friends that she was leading an idle life and that her education was being neglected. The child's mother is a drunkard. Already the girl has been five years in the Mercer, and her friends want her sent there for another five years. The police magistrate dismissed the case and spoke severely of what he called, whether deservedly or not, the ultra religious friends of the girl who would send her for five years in a prison instead of giving her a Christian home.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

"But what great things do you do?" she repeated, her dark eyes opening wider. "You cannot mean seriously that this is all. Do you never write, paint—have you no ambition at all?"

"I do not know what you call ambition," he replied, sullenly; "as for writing and painting, in England we pay people to do that kind of thing for us. You do not think that I would paint a picture, even if I could?"

"I should think you clever if you did that," she returned; "at present I cannot see that you do anything requiring mind or intellect."

"Miss Darrell," he said, looking at her, "you are a radical, I believe."

"A radical?" she repeated, slowly. "I am not quite sure, Captain Langton, that I know what that means."

"You believe in aristocracy of intellect, and all that kind of nonsense," he continued. "Why should a man who paints a picture be any better than the man who understands the good points of a horse?"

"Why, indeed?" she asked, satirically. "We will not argue the question, for we should not agree."

"I had her there," thought the captain. "She could not answer me. Some of these women require a high hand to keep them in order."

"I do not see Miss Hastings," she said at last, "and it is quite useless going to the aviary without her. I do not remember the name of a single bird; and I am sure you will not care for them."

"But," he returned, hesitatingly, "Sir Oswald seemed to wish it."

There is the first dinner-bell," she said, with an air of great relief; "there will only be just time to [illegible] you seem solicitous about Sir Oswald's wishes we had better go in, for he greatly loves punctuality."

"I believe," thought the captain, "that she is anxious to get away from me. I must say that I am not accustomed to this kind of thing."

The aspect of the dining-room, with its display of old plate, the brilliantly arranged table, the mingled odor of rare wines and fragrant flowers, restored him to good humor.

"It would be worth some little trouble," he thought, "to win all this."

It found Pauline in full dress. The grand, regal, passionate beauty of the girl had never shown to greater advantage than it did this evening, as she sat with the purple and crimson fuchsias in her hair and the broken lily in her belt. Sir Oswald did not notice the latter until dinner was nearly over. Then he said:

"Why, Pauline," with gardens and hot-houses full of flowers, have you chosen a broken one?"

"To me it is exquisite," she replied;

The captain's face darkened for a moment, but he would not take offence. The elegantly appointed table, the seductive dinner, the rare wines, all made an impression on him. He said to himself that there was a good thing offered to him, and that a girl's haughty temper should not stand in his way. He made himself most agreeable, he was all animation, vivacity, and high spirits with Sir Oswald. He was deferential and attentive to Miss Hastings, and his manner to Pauline left no doubt in the minds of the lookers on that he was completely fascinated by her. She was too proudly indifferent, too haughtily careless, even to resent it. Sir Oswald Darrell was too true a gentleman to offer his niece to any one; but he had given the captain to understand that, if he could woo her and win her, there would be no objection raised on his part.

For once in his life Captain Langton had spoken quite truthfully.

"I have nothing," he said; "my father left me but a very moderate fortune, and I have lost the greater part of it. I have not been careful or prudent, Sir Oswald."

"Care and prudence are not the virtues of youth," Sir Oswald returned. "I may say, honestly, I should be glad if your father's son could win my niece; as for fortune, she will be richly dowered if I make her my heiress. Only yesterday I heard that coal had been found on my Scotch estates, and, if that be true, it will raise my income many thousands per annum."

"May you long live to enjoy your wealth, Sir Oswald!" said the young man, so heartily that tears stood in the old baronet's eyes.

But there was one thing the gallant captain did not confess. He did not tell Sir Oswald Darrell—what was really the truth:—that he was over head and ears in debt, and that this visit to Darrell Court was the last stake left to him.

CHAPTER IX.

PAULINE STILL INCOMPREHENSIBLE.

Sir Oswald lingered over his wine. It was not every day that he found a companion so entirely to his taste as Captain Langton. The captain had a collection of anecdotes of the court, the aristocracy, and the mess-room, that could not be surpassed. He kept his own interest well in view the whole time, making some modest allusions to the frequency with which his society was sought, and the number of ladies who were disposed to regard him favorably. All was narrated with the greatest skill, without the least boasting, and Sir Oswald, as he listened with delight, owned to himself that, all things considered, he could not have chosen more wisely for his niece.

A second bottle of fine old port was discussed, and then Sir Oswald said:

"You will like to go to the drawing-room; the ladies will be there. I always enjoy forty winks after dinner."

The prospect of a tete-a-tete with Miss Darrell did not strike the captain as being a very rapturous one.

"She is," he said to himself, "a magnificently handsome girl, but almost too haughty to be bearable. I have never, in all my life, felt so small as I do when she speaks to me or looks at me, and no man likes that sort of thing."

David Hastings [illegible] the large annual income. Was a man to have never even dreamed of, and all might be his—Sir Oswald had said so; his, if he could but win the proud heart of the proudest girl it had ever been his fortune to meet—it was well worth going through [illegible] agreeable for.

"If she were only like other women," he thought, "I should know how to manage her; but she seems to live in the clouds."

The plunge had to be made, so the captain summoned all his courage, and went to the drawing-room. The picture as he [illegible] struck the least imaginative of men.

Miss Hastings, calm, elegant, [illegible], in her quiet evening dress of gray silk, was seated near a small stand on which stood a large lamp, by the light of which she was reading. The part of the room near her was brilliantly illuminated. It was a spacious apartment—unusually so even for a large mansion. It contained four large windows, two of which were closed, the gorgeous hangings of white and gold shielding them from view; the other end of the room was in semi-darkness, the brilliant light from the lamp not reaching it—the windows were thrown wide open, and the soft, pale moonlight came in. The evening came in, too, bringing with it the sweet breath of the lilies, the perfume of the roses, the fragrance of rich clover, carnations, and purple heliotropes. Faint shadows lay on the flowers, the white silvery light was very peaceful and sweet; the dewdrops shone on the grass—it was the fairest hour of nature's fair day.

Pauline had gone to the open window. Something had made her restless and unquiet; but, standing there, the spell of that beautiful moonlight scene calmed her, and held her fast. With one look at that wonderful sky and its myriad stars, one at the soft moonlight and the white lilies, the fever of life died from her, and a holy calm, sweet fancies, bright thoughts, swept over her like an angel's wing.

Then she became conscious of a stir in the perfumed air; something less agreeable mingled with the fragrance of the lilies—some scent of which she did not know the name, but which she disliked ever afterward because the captain used it. A low voice that would fain be tender murmured something in her ear; the spell of the moonlight was gone, the quickly thronging poetical fancies had all fled away, the beauty seemed to have left even the sleeping flowers. Turning round to him, she said, in a clear voice, every word sounding distinctly:

"Have the goodness, Captain Langton, not to startle me again. I do not like any one to come upon me in that unexpected manner."

"I was so happy to find you alone," he whispered.

"I do not know why that should make you happy. I always behave much better when I am with Miss Hastings than when I am alone."

"You are always charming," he said. "I want to ask you something, Miss Darrell. Be kind, be patient, and listen to me."

"I am neither kind nor patient by nature," she returned; "what have you to say?"

It was very difficult, he felt, to be sentimental with her. She had turned to the window, and was looking out again at the flowers; one little white hand played impatiently with a branch of guelder roses that came peeping in.

"I am jealous of those flowers," said the captain; "will you look at me instead of them?"

She raised her beautiful eyes, and looked at him so calmly, with so much conscious superiority in her manner, that the captain felt "smaller" than ever.

"You are talking nonsense to me," she said, loftily; "and as I do not like nonsense, will you tell me what you have to say?"

The voice was calm and cold, the tones measured and slightly contemptuous; it was very difficult under such circumstances to be an eloquent wooer, but the recollection of Darrell Court and its large rent-roll came to him and restored his fast expiring courage.

"I want to ask a favor of you," he said; and the pleading expression that he managed to throw into his face was really creditable to him. "I want to ask you if you will be a little kinder to me. I admire you so much that I should be the happiest man in all the world if you would but give me ever so little of your friendship."

She seemed to consider his words—to ponder them; and from her silence he took hope.

"I am quite unworthy, I know; but, if you knew how all my life long I have desired the friendship of a good and noble woman, you would be kinder to me—you would indeed!"

"Do you think, then, that I am good and noble?" she asked.

"I am sure of it; your face——"

"I wish," she interrupted, "that Sir Oswald were of your opinion. You have lived in what people call 'the world' all your life, Captain Langton, I suppose?"

"Yes," he replied wondering what would follow.

"You have been in society all that time yet I am the first 'good and noble woman' you have met! You are hardly complimentary to the sex, after all."

Belshazzar's Warning.

"Tried in the balance and found wanting," is the general verdict rendered against most of the so-called cures for lung troubles. But a decision has never been given against Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." On the contrary, it is endorsed by thousands who have tried it, to be the only remedy for consumption (scrofula of the lungs) and scrofulous diseases generally. It will not cure when both lungs are most gone, but if taken when the disease is in the first stages it never fails. It is also specific for such scrofulous affections as fever-sores, white swellings, hip-joint disease, and great eating ulcers, and for blood taints generally, from whatever cause arising. which is Scrofulous Disease of the Lungs, is promptly and certainly arrested and cured by this God-given remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its marvelous power over this terrible disease, when first offering the new and celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought himself justified in calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too restricted for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all

An Operatic Accident.

Mr. J.W. Herbert, the immense Ko Ko of the Mikado, introduced a "gag" last night to which he will doubtless decline an encore. During one of the half chants recalls that greeted the "flowers that bloom in spring tra-la!" his eccentric Japanese shuffle resulted in a fall that dislocated one of his wrists. A surgeon in the audience visited the green room and discovered that the injury was not very serious, and will not prevent Mr. Herbert from appearing to-night as usual.

Axe Accident.

This morning while Mr. W. H. Roberts, carpenter, who is making some alterations in the Oriental Hotel premises, met with a painful accident. He was knocking away a piece of scantling with [illegible] the head of the tool caught [illegible] Mr. Roberts' right arm in such a manner the thin blade made a deep gash in his arm, from near the shoulder to the beginning of the forearm, laying the muscles open for about four inches. A number of large veins were cut and the wound bled profusely. Dr. Halliday was summoned and dressed the wound, and succeeded in stopping the hemorrhage. It required several stitches to bring the separated parts together. Mr. Roberts will be unable to use his arm for weeks.

Sudden Death of a Stallion.

"Young Chaseman," a valuable Canadian draught stallion, the property of Mr. James McLaurin, died at the Morgan House stables yesterday evening. The animal was perfectly well when brought to the stables yesterday evening. Shortly after it showed symptoms of colic, and a veterinary surgeon was sent for, who prescribed for the sick horse, but with no apparent effect. It died after an hour's illness from congestion of the stomach. The horse was a very fine animal and was valued at $1,000. The loss will be a heavy one to Mr. McLaurin.

Vote of Thanks.

The following resolution was carried unanimously at the regular meeting of Ladies' Aid Society of the George Street Methodist Church:—

Resolved,—That the hearty thanks of this Society be tendered to the leader and members of the Fire Brigade Band for the efficient and cheerful assistance freely rendered by them at our recent Strawberry Festival, and on many previous occasions. The ladies of this Society also take this opportunity of expressing their sympathy with the band in its efforts to pay for new uniforms, and hope shortly to pay their gratitude in a more tangible form. Carried.

The Late Peter McCabe, Port Hope.

The Port Hope Times has the following in reference to the late Peter McCabe of Port Hope, who died suddenly:—

The funeral of the late Peter McCabe took place yesterday afternoon, and was a very large one, evidencing the high regard and esteem in which he was held by all classes of our citizens. On every side were heard warm expressions of respect for his high honour and integrity and deep regret at his lamented demise. He was par excellence that masterwork of creation "an honest man." The members of the town council and town officials attended the last sad rites, and in the long cortege were the most prominent of our citizens.

Mrs. McCabe was visiting in town with Mr. T. O. Rush, when she received a telegram announcing the severe illness of her husband and before the next train was due to start, she received another announcing his death.

All public institutions and places worth seeing, and there are hundreds of them, are thrown open, on specially liberal terms, to the visiting public. Don't fail to secure a ticket and be at the Midland station sharp at 7 o'clock, Tuesday morning, July 13th.

The Mirthful, Meritorious Mikado.

Last night the finest operatic performance ever put on the boards of Bradburn's Opera House was presented. Mr. John Templeton's company put on Gilbert & Sullivan's great opera, the Mikado, in a manner that kept the large audience present in raptures of delight from the rise of the curtain to the fall thereof. The company is a first class one in every respect. The chorus is full and well trained, their singing being simply perfect. The scenery and costumes are excellent. Everything is thoroughly Japanese and thoroughly in keeping with the character and locale of the opera. The soloists—so to speak—are all first class artists and their singing was of so high an order that repeated encores testified to the public appreciation of their performances. The Mikado, Mr. Charles L. Harris, was capitally personated. Mr. Broderick, as Pooh Bah, was a living satire of official pomposity, inefficiency, venality and greed. Mr. Jay Taylor as Nanki Poo, the love-lorn romantic prince, was the most prominent figure in the cast, and one of the best vocalists. Mr. J. W. Herbert, the inimitable Ko Ko, was simply superb. He was a favorite from the start; his vocalism, facial expression and everlasting funniness throughout, caught the house and held it. The flighty maidens of Ko Ko, Yum Yum, Pitti Sing and Peep Boo, filled their roles with good effect, while Miss Emma Baker, as Katisha, formed one of the best characters in the play. Her singing was very fine and her acting could not be surpassed in her role. Altogether, the opera of the Mikado, with its sparkling melodies, stinging satire, exquisite funniness and comic beauty, received a magnificent interpretation and presentation at the Opera House last night. Everybody was delighted and [illegible] house [illegible] the production by the opera [illegible]

Home Rule Defeated.

The Last Hope of the Gladstonian Party Gone—Results of the Elections.

LONDON, July 7.—The last hope of the Gladstonians—the vote in the counties—has failed. The English counties are going Unionist. The counties of Somerset, Warwick, Hereford, Derby, Denbigh, and Shropshire, have returned Conservatives. Scotland continues Gladstonian. Numerous county polls have not yet been taken, but it is impossible to reverse the defeat of the Government. The Unionists are confident of an ultimate strength of 370 against 280. The Conservatives are certain that with a compact phalanx of 300 members, Lord Salisbury will form a purely Conservative Ministry.

The Latest Result.

According to the latest returns received last night, the party stands:—Tories, 240; Unionists, 97; Gladstonians, 179; Parnellites, 85. There remain but 209 seats to be heard from.

FRIDAY, JULY 9, 1869.

Peterborough Presbytery.

(Communicated.)

Presbytery of Peterborough met in Port Hope on the 6th inst. There were present 15 ministers and 6 elders. Arrangements were made for the induction of Mr. McLeod in Brighton on the 21st inst., at 2 o'clock, Mr. McCrae to preside, Mr. McKenzie to preach, Mr. Cleland to expound Presbyterian Church polity, Mr. Smith to address the minister, and Mr. Hay the people.

It was agreed that the meetings of Presbytery be held alternately at Peterborough and Port Hope.

The following delegates were appointed to visit the several mission fields before next meeting of Presbytery: Minden and Haliburton, Mr. Bennett; Harvey, Mr. Mitchell; Havelock and Stoney Lake, Mr. Bell; Chandos and Burleigh, Mr. Carmichael. It was agreed to instruct all delegates to see that there is a communion roll in the several stations, and a record of all the families connected therewith.

Mr. Carmichael read a very valuable paper on the subject of "Congregational Contributions to the Schemes of the Church," setting forth the inequality of these and the good that would arise from the lower contributors coming up to the standard of the liberal. Messrs. Bell, Hay, Smith, Mitchell, and Messrs. Roxburgh and Cranck, elders, were appointed a committee to seek a more equitable basis for all Presbytery assessments.

To the former committee a vote of thanks was tendered and the committee dissolved.

The application of Rev. D. Beattie, of Campbellford, for reception into the Presbytery was referred to a committee. It was agreed that in the meantime Mr. Beattie's name be placed on the appendix to the roll.

The following standing committees were appointed:

Sabbath Schools.—Messrs. McEwen and Carmichael, ministers and Messrs. Roxburgh and Tully, elders.

State of Religion.—Messrs. Mitchell, McCrae and McKenzie, ministers and Messrs. Henderson and Cranck, elders.

Temperance.—Messrs. Bell, Hay and Cameron, ministers and Messrs. D. Smith, McNaughton and W. E. Johnstone, elders.

Statistics.—Messrs. Bennett, Cleland and Craigie, ministers.

Home Mission Committee.—The former members were re-appointed, namely, Messrs. Cleland Bennett, Torrance, Bell, Cameron, McCrae and Mitchell, ministers and I. L. Tisdale, elder.

The Committee on the care of students was re-appointed.

The next meeting of the Presbytery was appointed to be held in St. Andrew's, Peterborough, on the 14th September at 10.30 o'clock.

It was agreed to recommend the scheme for the restoration of the Frederickaburg Church to all the congregations and mission stations within the bounds.

Mr. Bennett presented the following scheme for the distribution of congregations on the behalf of missions.

It had been resolved upon at a former meeting that all the congregations should be visited prior to the beginning of the year.

The plan proposed by Mr. Bennett was unanimously adopted:

I. That for speedy and convenient visitations, the congregations be divided into six groups and that the following be the divisions made:—

(1.) Cobourg, Brighton, Colborne and Lakeport, Grafton and Vernonville.

(2.) Port Hope, 1st congregation, Mill Street, Port Hope, Baltimore and Coldsprings, Garden Hill and Knoxville.

(3.) Millbrook and Centreville, Mount Pleasant, Lakevale, Omemee, Bobcaygeon and Dunsford.

(4.) St. Paul's, Peterborough, St. Andrews, Peterborough, Springville and Bethany, Cartwright and Ballyduff.

SEEN THROUGH A GLASS.

The Use of the Microscope in Detecting Forgeries.

The Star reporter was sitting in Dr. E. M. Schaeffer's office the other evening talking with him of the mysteries of the microscope. Dr. Schaeffer is called in as an expert microscopist in a great many cases in the courts. "This little instrument is a very valuable witness sometimes," he said, as he put a slide upon the microscope and addressed himself to the scribe. "It is exceedingly inquisitive and uncovers a great many mysteries, not only of inanimate nature, but of man. As its master, I am informed of many curious things. A great many domestic tragedies, which it would not do to mention, have come under my notice through it. Those in that case—" and he walked over to a little glass-front cabinet on the wall. "That contains parts of many well-known and some distinguished men, and some of whom are now living and some others of whom are dead. Some very interesting and curious incidents of a domestic character are brought to my attention by folks who come to have microscopic analyses made. Not very long ago the result of one of these analyses came near leading to a tragedy. The principal things an expert microscopist is called for in the courts is to testify as to blood on clothing or something of that sort in a murder trial, or as to writing in cases of forgery. I can tell instantly whether a stain is blood or not, no matter how dim and indistinct it is, and this is often most important in the detection of crime."

"Can you distinguish animal blood from human?" asked the reporter.

"I have frequently heard of expert witnesses testifying that certain stains were made by human blood. I think they are wrong to assume to so much knowledge. The little corpuscles of a sheep's or a dog's blood are, as a rule, smaller than those of a man's, but it has been discovered by careful study that the largest of the sheep or other animals and the smallest of the man may be the same size. This of course does away with all certainty of distinction. A bird's blood may be distinguished from human, because its corpuscles are of a different shape. But this does not lessen the importance of discovering blood stains on a murderer's clothing. The circumstances and other evidences will do the rest.

"Some of the most interesting cases," he continued, "are those of handwriting. I have had a very thorough study of this under the microscope, both as to individuality of form and as to various sorts of ink, and the effect of time and condition upon them. I can very readily discover forgeries, interlineations or erasures. I do not think I could be deceived in this unless the man that did the work had the same facilities for doing it that I have for detecting it—that is, unless the forger was a microscopist. One case in which I testified was where a man was being sued on a bond involving $100,000. He acknowledged that he had signed a bond for one of the parties named in the bond produced, but claimed that the second name had been added since. The person he signed for, he said, was reliable and trustworthy, but the other person was not, and he would never have signed the bond had his name been upon it at the time. All the writing on the document was in the same hand and appeared to have been written at the same time. Under the microscope I discovered by the age of the ink, that the second name had been added some time after the paper was signed, and that the pronoun 'him' had been changed to 'them' whenever it occurred on the bond. Another case I was called into was where an old man's name had been forged to notes by his son-in-law. There were ninety notes for $1.000 each, which the old man pronounced forgeries, and on examining them I found them to be such. Without knowing anything of his habits, I knew as soon as I saw his genuine signature that he always wrote it with a gold pen. The forgeries were all written with a steel pen, and there were enough points of difference for me to be able to distinguish them from the genuine in every case. In a murder trial in Maryland there was a curious case of forgery involved. A faithless wife and her lover determined to put a troublesome husband out of the way. The husband remarked one morning at breakfast that the coffee tasted strange. A few minutes later he fell in a fit and died. At the inquest a note was produced purporting to be from the deceased, written just before his death, confessing that he had taken his own life. Nobody could be found who had ever seen any of the man's writing except his signature, and that appeared to be all right on the note. There was nothing to compare the rest of the writing with. I examined the note very carefully, and found that while the body of the manuscript was written freely and naturally, as if by some one used to writing, the signature was very black and heavy and seemed to have been drawn. Another thing was that, while it must have taken considerable pressure to make it so black (the whole was written with a pencil), there was no impression through the paper. I pronounced the note a forgery. I knew beyond a doubt that it was. The friends of the widow threatened to kill the expert, but they gave up the note as a defense and took up another line, by which they secured an acquittal. After it was all over with, and the accused could not be again put on trial, his sister-in-law bragged that she had written the note and traced the signature from an original by holding it against the window-pane. The hard, smooth surface of the glass was what had prevented the pencil lines from showing through the paper. The question was raised in another case as to whether an erasure on a bond for $40,000 had been made before or after it had been stamped with the magistrate's seal. The paper had a rough, woolly surface where the erasure had been made, and the impression of the seal had not smoothed it down. This was held by those who wanted to avoid the bond to be an evidence that the erasure had been made after the seal was put on. I tested this under the microscope and made experiments with a seal, demonstrating that the seal was put on top of the erasure. Cases of this sort are very numerous and some of them get to be interesting. But forgeries are not so easily detected in the signatures as in the body of the manuscript. The dotting of 'i's' and the crossing of 't's' show most. There are, however, many characteristics in most signatures that can not be counterfeited so as not to show the fraud if tested by a microscope."—Washington Star.

Offsetting a Claim.

In one of the northern counties of Michigan P. Q. Smith bobbed up serenely before the board of supervisors with a claim of $250 for alleged services rendered the county in the capacity of extra deputy sheriff during a recent misunderstanding between capital and labor.

The chairman of the board reflected a moment and said: "Mr. Smith, you were indicted by the grand jury in this county some years ago, were you not?"

"Yes, sir," modestly observed Smith.

"You were convicted and sentenced for three months?"

"Yes, sir," replied Smith, without ostentation.

"Your case cost the county $126?"

"I guess so," stammered the extra deputy, doubtfully.

"You have at two different times served sentences in the county jail, at an expense to the county of $54."

Smith was silent, as he began to see the drift of the chairman's remarks.

"We will pass your claim to the credit of your account. You still owe the county $39."

As Mr. Smith groped in a dazed sort of manner toward the door the board proceeded to elucidate the true inwardness of the next claim.—Detroit Free Press.

Man-trap Advertisements.

To the Editor of THE DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—As a reader of the papers, I have had occasion to frequently become nauseated with disgust, and to feel like kicking myself for having become absorbed in an interesting news item, only to find that it was the padding for an ingeniously concealed advertisement at the end. I have even sometimes been moved to a profane pitch. As an example, in the EXAMINER a day or two ago, I adjusted my spectacles to read to my wife the particulars of a "Domestic Broil" on our street. I read on with my faultless elocution, and when I came to the end, I rent the paper in twain and swore at my wife for listening to the veil which ended with the announcement that the Foresters' excursion would proceed to Toronto on Tuesday, July 13th. My being sold was not all my trouble, for my wife at once insisted that we must "take in" that excursion, "it will be so nice," "Toronto will be so full of attractions," "the fare is so cheap—only $2.75 for the round trip"—"the tickets are good for eight days." So I have bought two tickets, and my wife and I will be at the Midland station, on Tuesday morning, July 13th, at 7 sharp. Hoping that my letter may prove a warning to the unwary,

I remain, etc.,

Bradstreet says the Dominion Government took good care to place the railway grants, not where most needed, but "where they will do most good in the coming election."

Queen the London Advertiser:—"Lord Randolph Churchill, when he speaks of the Irish question not being ripe for settlement, is indulging in the 'old to-morrow' tactics that produced a rebellion in the Canadian Northwest."

The Canadian Niagara Falls Park arbitrators met Wednesday at the Prospect house to wind up their labours, and will continue in session until they have finally disposed of the unfinished cases. It is expected that the awards will be announced by the end of this month.

The London Free Press, a paper published by the Dominion Government, under the management of Mr. Josiah Blackburn, says the N. P. is a great benefit to farmers, because the farmers now get better prices for their produce than in 1816! This is a powerful argument, and the Free Press should have added that under the N. P., farming lands are a trifle higher in price than when Columbus discovered America.

The Tory journals that go into hysterical panygerics of Sir John because of his high sense of justice in hanging Riel, neglected to state that if Sir John had hanged Riel 15 years ago, when he was as guilty as he was last November, the country would have been saved a rebellion that cost 200 Canadian lives and some eight or ten millions of money. Can they make it appear that Sir John's hanging of Riel now, can "trammel up" the consequences of his not doing his duty fifteen years ago?

The weary work of selecting a jury for the trial of the Chicago Anarchists still goes on. Monday last the-third week was entered upon, and 64 persons were questioned during the day, all being rejected. All told 586 men have been examined, and the defence has exhausted 86 of its peremptory challenges, while the State has peremptorily dismissed 29. An absurd statute provides that no man who has read the papers or formed an opinion on any case is eligible as a juryman. Some Canadian "however" newspaper editors would make excellent jurymen, according to this standard.

Mrs. Gladstone has taken the stump, and it is said made a very excellent speech in favor of Mr. Arnold White at Mile End. Mrs. Gladstone is said to be an old hand at Parliamentary and platform speaking. She took the rostrum without nervousness Her voice was clear and could be heard to the end of the room, though she spoke without any effort. She said she thanked them with all her heart for her touching reception, which she knew was given for her husband's sake. She said: "Let me tell you his heart is with you, and I cannot do better than give you a message from him. He bids you look back upon the history of the past and forward to the prospects of the future, and to avail yourselves of the privilege of assisting in the redress of the wrongs of Ireland. The battle has begun, and he desires you to help him him to win it by rallying to the aid of Mr. White, and to that of his work of devotion on other occasions."

A Municipal Deadlock.

Police Court.

The Charge Against F. J. and J. J. Daly Dismissed—Illicit Moxie Found the Popular Beverage.

The hearing of Scott Act cases was resumed at the police court, yesterday afternoon.

F. J. and J. J. Daly were before the court charged by Henry Roesler, with unlawfully keeping liquor for sale between the 19th of May and 6th of July.

Mr. W. H. Moss appeared for the defendants, Mr. E. B. Edwards for the private prosecutor and Mr. R. E. Wood for the Crown.

Joseph Daly was called to the box first.

Mr. Wood here objected to Mr. Edwards conducting the case, holding that he as Crown Attorney should conduct it.

Mr. Edwards pointed out that the charge was laid by a private party.

Mr. Wood said the subpœnas showed that the case was Queen vs. Daly, and held that any prosecution in the name of the Queen must be conducted under his sanction.

Mr. Edwards expressed astonishment at the action of Mr. Wood.

The magistrate here suggested that Mr. Wood could represent the Crown and Mr. Edwards the private prosecutor.

Mr. Wood claimed that the question should be put through the Crown Attorney. It was his business to conduct the case as well as examine the witnesses.

The magistrate suggested that they should settle the question out of court.

Mr. Wood said he wanted the magistrate's ruling on the question.

Mr. Edwards again expressed surprise at the action of Mr. Wood. He said he had conducted about twenty cases, and now Mr. Wood brought this matter up in open court, springing the question without giving him any notice of what he intended to do.

Mr. Wood said he thought it was about time he was doing something. He had to spring it some time. Mr. Edwards was only employed by Henry Roesler, while he was employed by the Crown to conduct such cases.

The magistrate said he would note Mr. Wood's claim. He knew of instances in which such cases were conducted by the counsel for the private prosecutor, and asked Mr. Wood to allow Mr. Edwards to proceed. They could settle the question out of court. He would note that Mr. Wood was present, looking after the interest of the Crown.

Mr. Wood said he was not paid for sitting in the court or his office doing nothing. He had made application to the clerk of the court for the papers in the case, but they were not in his possession. He appealed to the Court to rule on his objection.

The magistrate said he thought Mr. Edwards should conduct the case. He was not prepared to rule on the question in dispute.

Mr. Edwards expressed his intention of proceeding with the case.

On suggestion of the magistrate Mr. Wood consented to allow Mr. Edwards to conduct the case, with the understanding that Mr. Edwards appeared for him.

Mr. Daly being sworn the case was proceeded with.

Mr. Edwards—Are you one of the proprietors of the Oriental?

Mr. Daly—No sir, I am not.

Mr. Edwards—Oh! I beg your pardon; of the Grand Central, I mean?

Mr. Daly—Yes. I am one of the proprietors of the Grand Central; I conduct the bar; Richard Phelan is the bar-tender; he has control of the bar in my absence.

Mr. Edwards—Between the 19th of May and the 6th of July have you kept for sale any intoxicating liquor?

Witness—I refuse to answer any question that may tend to criminate me.

The magistrate sustained the objection and the witness was allowed to go.

Richard Phelan testified,—I am bar-tender at Daly's hotel; I have charge of the bar under Mr. Daly; there has been no intoxicating liquor kept for sale between the 19th of May and 6th of July, that I know of. (Here the witness gave a list of the drinks kept for sale.) I have seen intoxicated men there since the 19th of May; I don't know where they got the stuff that made them stagger; I do not know if there is anything intoxicating in Moxie Nerve Food—I have never tasted it; I have tasted Trebell's sarsaparilla; It is not intoxicating to the best of my knowledge; I don't think there has been any liquor brought into the hotel or any sold over the bar or otherwise, between the dates mentioned; Moxie is the favorite drink; some of those who drank whiskey before will not drink Moxie—they say it don't hit the right place.

Alexander Graham, testified—Between the 19th of May and 6th of July I got a drink of Moxie on several occasions at Daly's hotel; I drank with several persons whom I called up as friends; there was nothing intoxicating in the Moxie I drank.

Joseph Langford, testified—I have got nothing of an intoxicating nature to drink at Daly's since the 19th of May; I had a drink of Moxie but I do not like it—it is not intoxicating.

David Crowley, testified—I have on one occasion got a drink of Moxie at Daly's since the 16th of May; as the Irishman said: "I claim to be a gintlemen and a judge of liquor." I do not think there is anything intoxicating in Moxie; I asked Phelan for liquor and he refused; I think he would give it to me if he had it for sale as we are old friends.

Albert Wright, testified—I have had Moxie and lemon soda to drink at Daly's hotel since May 19th, but have had nothing of an intoxicating nature.

Joseph Daly, recalled—

Mr. Edwards—From whom do you purchase your Moxie?

Mr. Daly—I refuse to answer the question on the ground that it may tend to criminate me. I get the Moxie in bottles and cases.

Mr. Edwards—Do you sell the Moxie in the same state as you buy it.

The Witness—I refuse to answer whether I mix anything with it or not.

Nine other witnesses gave evidence to the effect that they drank Moxie at Daly's between the 19th of May and 6th of June. They did not think there was anything intoxicating as Moxie. Several of the witnesses had asked for something strong and were refused. Moxie was the stoutest drink sold.

Several witnesses who were subpœnaed did not appear when called.

The magistrate thought the court had had enough Moxie for one day, and dismissed the case with costs.

ENLARGED.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

The captain was slightly taken aback.

"I did not say those exact words, Miss Darrell."

"But you implied them. Tell me why you wish for my friendship more than any other. Miss Hastings is ten thousand times more estimable than I am—why not make her your friend?"

"I admire you—I like you. I could say more, but I dare not. You are hard upon me, Miss Darrell."

"I have no wish to be hard," she returned. "Who am I that I should be hard upon any one? But, you see, I am unfortunately what people call very plain-spoken—very truthful."

"So much the better," said Captain Langton.

"Is it? Sir Oswald says not. If he does not make me his heiress, it will be because I have such an abrupt manner of speaking; he often tells me so."

"Truth in a beautiful woman," began the captain, sentimentally; but Miss Darrell again interrupted him—she had little patience with his platitudes.

"You say you wish for my friendship because you like me. Now, here is the difficulty—I cannot give it to you, because I do not like you."

"You do not like me?" cried the captain, hardly able to believe the evidence of his own senses. "You cannot mean it! You are the first person who ever said such a thing!"

"Perhaps I am not the first who ever thought it; but then, as I tell you, I am very apt to say what I think."

"Will you tell me why you do not like me?" asked the captain, quietly. He began to see that nothing could be gained in any other fashion.

Her beautiful face was raised quite calmly to his, her dark eyes were as proudly serene as ever, she was utterly unconscious that she was saying anything extraordinary.

"I will tell you with pleasure," she replied. "You seem to me wanting in truth and earnestness; you think people are to be pleased by flattery. You flatter Sir Oswald, you flatter Miss Hastings, you flatter me. Being agreeable is all very well, but an honest man does not need to flatter—does not think of it, in fact. Then, you are either heedless or cruel—I do not know which. Why should you kill that beautiful flower that Heaven made to enjoy the sunshine, just for one idle moment's wanton sport?"

Captain Langton's face grew perfectly white with anger.

"Upon my word of honor, he said, "I never heard anything like this!"

Miss Darrell turned carelessly away.

"You see," she said, "friendship between us would be rather difficult. But I will not judge too hastily; I will wait a few days, and then decide."

She had quitted the room before Captain Langton had sufficiently recovered from his dismay to answer.

CHAPTER X.

HOW WILL IT END?

It was some minutes before Captain Langton collected himself sufficiently to cross the room and speak to Miss Hastings. She looked up at him with a smile.

"I am afraid you have not had a very pleasant time of it at that end of the room, Captain Langton," she said; "I was just on the point of interfering."

"Your pupil is a most extraordinary young lady, Miss Hastings," he returned; "I have never met with any one more so."

Miss Hastings laughed; there was an expression of great amusement on her face.

"She is certainly very original, Captain Langton; quite different from the pattern young lady of the present day."

"She is magnificently handsome," he continued; "but her manners are simply startling."

"She has very grand qualities," said Miss Hastings; "she has a noble disposition and a generous heart, but the want of early training, the mixing entirely with one class of society, has made her very strange."

"Strange!" cried the captain. "I have never met with any one so blunt, so outspoken, so abrupt, in all my life. She has no notion of repose or polish. I have never been so surprised. I hear Sir Oswald coming, and really, Miss Hastings, I feel that I cannot see him; I am not equal to it—that extraordinary girl has quite unsettled me. You might mention that I have gone out in the grounds to smoke my cigar; I cannot talk to any one."

Miss Hastings laughed as he passed out through the open French window into the grounds. Sir Oswald came in, smiling and contented; he talked for a few minutes with Miss Hastings, and heard that the captain was smoking his cigar. He expressed to Miss Hastings his very favorable opinion of the young man, and then bade her good-night.

"How will it end?" said the governess to herself. "She will never marry him, I am sure. Those proud, clear, dark eyes of hers look through all his little airs and graces; her grand soul seems to understand all the narrowness and selfishness of his. She will never marry him. Oh, if she would but be civilized! Sir Oswald is quite capable of leaving all he has to the captain, and then what would become of Pauline?"

By this time the gentle, graceful governess had become warmly attached to the beautiful, wayward, willful girl who persisted so obstinately in refusing what she chose to call "polish."

"How will it end?" said the governess. "I would give all I have to see Pauline mistress of Darrell Court; but I fear the future."

Some of the scenes that took place between Miss Darrell and the captain were very amusing. She had the utmost contempt for his somewhat dandified airs, his graces, and affections.

"I like a grand, rugged noble man, with the head of a hero, and the brow of a poet, the heart of a lion, and the smile of a child," she said to him one day; "I cannot endure a coxcomb."

"I hope you may find such a man, Miss Darrell," he returned, quietly. "I have been some time in the world, but I have never met with such a character."

"I think your world has been a very limited one," she replied, and the captain looked angry.

He had certainly hoped and intended to dazzle her with his worldly knowledge, if nothing else. Yet how she despised his knowledge, and with what contempt she heard him speak of his various experiences!

Nothing seemed to jar upon her soul to irritate her as did his affectations. She was looking one morning at a very beautifully veined leaf, which she passed over to Miss Hastings.

"Is it not wonderful?" she asked; and the captain, with his eye-glass, came to look at it.

"Are you short-sighted?" she asked him, abruptly.

"Not in the least," he replied.

"Is your sight defective?" she continued.

"No, not in the least degree."

"Then why do you use that eye-glass, Captain Langton?"

"I—e— why, because everybody uses one," he replied.

"I thought it was only women who did that kind of thing—followed a fashion for fashion's sake," she said with some little contempt.

The next morning the captain descended without his eye-glass, and Miss Hastings smiled as she noticed it.

Another of his affectations was a pretended inability to pronounce his "r's" and "r's."

"Can you really not speak plainly?" she said to him one day.

"Most decidedly I can," he replied, wondering what was coming next.

"Then, why do you call 'rove' 'wove' in that absurd fashion?'

The captain's face flushed.

"It is a habit I have fallen into, I suppose," he replied. "I must break myself of it."

"It is about the most effeminate habit a man can fall into," said Miss Darrell. "I think that, if I were a soldier, I should delight in clear, plain speaking. I cannot understand why English gentlemen seem to think it fashionable to mutilate their mother tongue."

There was no chance of their ever agreeing—they never did even for one single hour.

"What are you thinking about, Pauline?" asked Miss Hastings one day.

Her young pupil had fallen into a reverie over "The History of the Peninsular War."

"I am thinking," she replied, "that, although France boasts so much of her military glory England has a superior army; her soldiers are very brave; her officers the truest gentlemen."

"I am glad to hear that you think so. I have often wondered if you would take our guest as a sample."

Her beautiful lips curled with unutterable contempt.

"Certainly not. I often contrast him with a Captain Lafosse, who used to visit us in the Rue d'Orme, a grand man with a brown, rugged face, and great brown hands. Captain Langton is a coxcomb—neither more nor less, Miss Hastings."

"But he is polished, refined, elegant in his manner and address, which, perhaps, your friend with the brown, rugged face was not."

"We shall not agree, Miss Hastings, we shall not agree. I do not like Captain Langton."

Belshazzar's Warning.

"Tried in the balance and found wanting," is the general verdict rendered against most of the so-called cures for lung troubles. Such a decision has never been given against Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." On the contrary, it is conceded by thousands who have tried it, to be the only remedy for consumption (scrofula of the lungs) and scrofulous diseases generally. It will not cure when both lungs are most gone, but if taken when the disease is in the first stages it never fails It is also specific for such scrofulous affections as fever-sores, white swellings, hip-joint disease, and great eating ulcers, and for blood taints generally, from whatever cause arising. Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pay them a larger profit, the consumer being the loser thereby.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofulous Disease of the Lungs, is promptly and certainly arrested and cured by this God-given remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its wonderful power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all Excursion from Lindsay.

The Methodists of Lindsay and their friends pic-nicked at Mr. James Dizon's grove—at the quarry—to-day. Seven coaches arrived at the grove this morning about eleven o'clock, where they were relieved of the majority of their load. A number of excursionists came down to the station and during the day visited friends and viewed the town generally.

The Mikado.

The Mikado was repeated in the Opera House last night by the John Templeton Opera Company. As the Mikado put it when he heard of those who were present at the execution of Nanki Poo, "the attendance was very good for the second evening." The performance throughout was brilliant and thoroughly delighted the audience. The entire company in their several roles were highly successful in their interpretations. Pitti Sing's "He's Going to Marry Yum Yum," with suggestive chorus; Nanki Poo's "The Flowers that Bloom in the Spring;" the quartette by Yum Yum, Pitti Sing, Nanki Poo, Pooh Bah, and Ko Ko's "Tit Willow" song were the favorite selections. The company left town to-day for Port Hope where they will perform this evening.

Death of Miss Panton.

The Whitby Chronicle furnishes the following particulars respecting the sad death by drowning of Miss Panton, alluded to in yesterday's EXAMINER:

"Miss Panton, formerly teacher in one of the ward schools, Oshawa, was found drowned in Laughland's mill-pond on Wednesday morning. The young lady has been subject to fits of melancholy for some time, but nothing serious was apprehended. On Tuesday she attended the garden party given by Dr. Rae. She left the party about 12 m. and at 3 a.m. she was missed from her room. After a two hours' search the unfortunate lady's bonnet was found on the banks of the pond. The water was immediately let off, and the body recovered shortly afterward. Her sorrowing friends have the sympathy of the entire community.

The telegraphic despatch makes the name "Nina," but it is feared by the many friends in town of Miss Mina Panton that it is an error in the initial letter. Miss Mina Panton was or is a sister of the Miss Panton who taught in the High School here, and two years ago was in town on a lengthened visit, as will be remembered by the many friends who had the pleasure of meeting her at that time.

George Street S. S. Excursion.

The annual excursion pic-nic of the George Street Methodist Church, which took place to Hutton's Grove, near Lindsey, yesterday afternoon, was a most enjoyable affair. The excursionists numbering about six hundred, after a little over an hour's ride, were set down at the platform in front of the pic-nic grounds, a delightful green shady beech and maple grove, about a mile southwest of Lindsay. After transferring the baskets from the car to the building provided for that purpose, the party gave themselves up to merry making. A game of football was indulged in while others strolled around the grounds or occupied the numerous swings, which were suspended from high up in the trees. A number of boys and girls found a raspberry patch, where they gathered the fruit diligently. After dinner a number of games and sports were engaged in, which were well contested and provided amusement for hours. Hundreds of the excursionists visited Lindsay during the day to see friends. After enjoying themselves thoroughly for eight hours the excursionists boarded the train of thirteen cars and were quickly carried home.

Enraged Cattle Attack a River-Driver.

The Campbellford Herald tells the following story:—On Saturday last, while "Bill" McKay, of Apsley, one of Kirby's gang on the drive, in the employ of the Rathbun Company, was in search of water on Hickory island, in the Trent river he was attacked by a vicious bull. Thinking their would be little virtue in putting the animal on the neck at such a time, Mackay ran away from him and sought refuge in a small tree. The bull followed him and coming up to him began a loud bellow which attracted other cattle that were feeding on the island, and the whole herd numbering about 40, rushed to the spot and roared and galloped about like wild animals. Mackay shouted to his comrades, ten in number, who comprehending at once the position in which he was placed, hastened to his help, and with pike-poles, and levers, and shouts and dog-barking, managed after a fierce fight to rout the furious herd. Then they entered into a hot conflict with the bull and he was soon vanquished. William doesn't know much about fear, but he got a fright when the cattle surrounded him, which he will not soon forget.

Division Court.

The Division Court opened this morning before His Honor, Judge Weller. There was an unusually large docket and the cases were of unusual interest. One of particular interest to cheese men—both makers and patrons—was that of Moore vs. Hall, an action brought by Mr. J. W. Moore of Lakefield, to recover damages for alleged breach of agreement. It appears from the evidence that, 1882, Mr. Moore entered into agreement to build and conduct a cheese factory in Douro, on condition that a sufficient number of farmers would agree to supply the milk of a stated number of cows for five seasons. A sufficient number of farmers entered into the agreement, among them being the defendant in this case, who, after supplying milk for one season, refused to longer supply it, on the grounds that a by-law, made by the patrons, relieved him from the agreement. This the defendant disputed and brought suit. The result was that the jury, which sat on the case, gave the plaintiff, Mr. Moore, a verdict for $60 and costs. Mr. Poussette for plaintiff, Mr. Edwards for defendant. The matter was thoroughly gone into; the defendant's counsel using every effort to gain the defendant's contention, but the law and facts seemed to be in the plaintiff's favor. This is the third suit Mr. Moore has won on the issue arising out of the refusal to abide by the agreement. Last spring, before Judge Weller, he secured judgment in two cases, so that the question at issue has been decided in his favor by both judge and jury. These decisions are of much interest to cheese men, as there exist, so we are informed, similar conditions in several other townships. There are several other cases of interest to be tried, one brought by Mr. Wm. Kearns, of Young's Point, against Chief of Police Cooper, to recover damages—laid at $60—for assault—which, it is alleged, consisted in the defendant attempting to take a roll of bills from plaintiff in the police court room, Peterborough, in which the plaintiff was a party in a Scott Act case. Mr. T. Dunn brings an action of replevin against Chief Cooper, Police Magistrate Dumble and Inspector Cochrane, to recover goods sold under an alleged illegal distraint, under a conviction made by the police magistrate on the charge of Inspector Cochrane.

You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. E. KING.

St. Luke's Tenth Anniversary.

Confirmation and Special Anniversary Services—Conducted by the Lord Bishop of Toronto.

Yesterday was a day of special interest to the congregation of St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, it being the tenth anniversary of the parish. In the afternoon confirmation service was held in the church, at which the Lord Bishop of Toronto, administered the rite of confirmation to twenty-seven females and nineteen males. A large congregation attended this solemn and impressive service

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.

In the evening service was held in the church, at which the Lord Bishop preached a powerful and eloquent sermon. He took as the text of his discourse the 8th verse of the 26th Psalm, "Lord I have loved the habitation of thy house and the place where thine honor dwelleth." The following is a short synopsis of the sermon. His Lordship said on such an occasion as the congregation was celebrating, he thought it becoming that they should honestly put to themselves the question, whether they loved the house of God. He drew attention to the fact that church going was probably more largely observed than in any former period of the church's history, but to say that these church goers truly loved the house of the Lord would savor of exaggeration. If church goers were as earnest as David and St. Paul in their love for the house of God, it would be a source of greater blessing and joy, and be exhorted his hearers to strive to equal David in his love for God's day and His house, as set forth in his Psalms. The outward indications flatteringly pointed to love for God's house, by the handsome and spacious edifices which were set apart for his service. Yet these also indicated a growth of the æsthetic taste—love for the beautiful—as was also indicated in the architectural beauty of other buildings and houses. Emulation and competition between congregations, and an effort to keep pace with appearances were to a certain extent accountable for the improvement in the buildings dedicated to God's service. Although it must be acknowledged that church-going was unprecedented, which was a reason to be thankful for, yet it did not follow that the love of God and God's house was the cause of it. Popular preachers, fine floral displays, and attractive music brought many to God's house, who might be called sight-seers. They did not go for spiritual blessing. He exhorted his hearers to bring this home to themselves, so that they might say with the Psalmist: "Lord I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thy honor dwelleth." The result would be that the love of God would draw the feet thither and not drive them. Warm or cold weather, bad roads or indisposition would not be considered an excuse for absence. The interest in the services would increase and hearty responses, which were painfully absent at times, would be the result. Large, substantial and liberal gifts, as David gave toward building the temple, would be an outward result. Gifts given with a ready mind would melt away the church debts, which so often cumbered them. In conclusion he referred to the church in which he preached, the place where the congregation had worshipped for ten years, which he trusted had been a place of joy to many and which he prayed would continue to be so to many more. He hoped they would believe that it was the gate of heaven. No doubt it was the dearest place on earth to many—the place where they had taken solemn vows, their spiritual birthplace and for which they should entertain a lasting love.

Rev. Rural Dean Allan, of Millbrook, and Rev. W. C. Bradshaw, Rector, assisted in the services.

What the Prize Farm Judges Have to Say.

TORONTO, July 7.—The prize farm judges appointed by the Agricultural and Arts Association, have returned from their first tour of inspection, after having travelled about 1,600 miles. They speak of the crops as being on the whole backward, although spring grain will yet yield well. In the Eastern section timothy has been much injured by the winter, and in the West the hay crop is not heavy with the exception of Bruce county. Fall wheat looked very poor, and will certainly fall short of the estimates reported to the Bureau of Industries early in the season.

Cobourg Cricketers Defeated by Peterborough P. A. A. As. by Three Runs—A Close and Exciting Match.

A team of the Peterborough club drove to Cobourg and played yesterday a very exciting match with the club in that place. Peterborough batted first and scored 89 of which Wilson scored 27 and Logan 26, and Hammond 13. Wilson's 27 were got by steady play and Hammond by his usual hard hitting, but Logan played by far the best innings of the match, his forward play being the admiration of all on the ground. He went in with the score at 8 for one wicket, and was last man out. Cobourg scored 84, Hargraft getting 25 and Trower 12 by good clean hitting. The smart stumping of Coste by Baker, deserves mention.

In the second innings, Peterborough scored only 37, Ray's 13 being obtained in his usual fine form. The bowling of of Coste (of Ottawa), seemed too much for the batsmen, aided as it was by a couple of very fine catches in slips made by Dr. White and A. Hargraft respectively.

With only 42 to get to tie, the game seemed greatly in favor of Cobourg, especially when Coste hit one into the lake at the very start. The very fine bowling of Logan and Wilson helped, at a very critical stage of the game, by two good catches of Stratton's (one of them being a really magnificent one, just saved the game for Peterborough by 3 runs. Unfortunately, one of the Cobourgs had left the field, and did not turn up for his innings.

For Peterborough, Logan had nine wickets for 42 runs, Wilson 7 for 22, and Lees 2 for 34.

The fielding of both sides was good, considering the miserable state of the out field, especially in the second innings; the Cobourg men, however, returned the ball much more quickly and accurately than the Peterboroughs.

Important Information to the Trade.

We have received information from a reliable source that some of the wholesale dealers are endeavoring to injure our brands by representing "that they are not as good as they used to be." This is done for the sole purpose of foisting upon the retailer and the consumer, private and unknown brands, that pay them (the wholesalers) a large profit. It is a well-known and indisputable fact that for the past twenty-five years the reputation and the quality of the justly celebrated and popular brands, CABLE, EL PADRE, and others of our manufacture, have been and always will be maintained, the statements of interested parties to the contrary, notwithstanding. We respectfully beg to impress upon smokers the importance of their insisting upon having our reliable and well known brands, if they desire to avoid smoking cheap trashy cigars, when a little thoughtfulness would have obviated the annoyance and disappointment consequent upon taking whatever is handed to them. Retailers would do well to avoid the persuasive and oratorical jobber, that endeavors to impress upon them the importance of trying private and unknown brands in preference to the CABLE and EL PADRE that have outlived the thousand and 1 brands that have been introduced since the introduction of the CABLE and EL PADRE. Our (5c) CABLE is put up in two sizes, the CONCHA and IMPERIAL QUEEN cigar has a narrow red band, with the word CABLE on it. None other genuine. Our new brand MADRE E HIJO is exceptionally fine and well worth a trial. S. DAVIS & SONS. Factories, Montreal, Toronto branch, 34 Church street.

Only An Incident.

A few evenings ago, writes a Southern lady, the conversation turned upon suitable times and places for courtships. I said I had once been an accidental eye-witness—shall I call it?—to a proposal on the cars. "Oh, tell us!" "Please do let us hear!" exclaimed ten young voices and two mature ones. I could not resist, and after the recital, which was suitably applauded, a lady, whose opinion I value, begged that I would send it to Harper. I hope the parties—unknown to me—will take no offense if they recognize the courtship as their property. I have heard, though, that at such an absorbing moment the identical words used are seldom remembered.

I was sitting on a train about to leave Richmond, Virginia, for Petersburg, when a bridal party came on, and one of the bridesmaids occupied the vacant seat by my side. The coach was crowded, and her special escort could not find a seat, but contented himself by standing in the aisle at her side, conversing about the events of the day. It became dark, and I closed the book I had been reading, and leaned my head on the window, and closed my eyes, simply to rest them. Nothing was farther from my thoughts than to be an eaves-dropper, but so in the event I proved to be; for in the darkening twilight the absorbed couple, supposing me to be asleep, settled into "love's low tone," each word of which struck upon my ear clear as a bell, for in his earnestness he leaned on the back of the seat in front of us, his face, as you can picture for yourself, forming with the lady's ear and mine an equi-lateral triangle. In free America, and on a public conveyance, I did not think it necessary to remind them of my presence. Presently he bent closer, and whispered: "You must know by this time what my attentions to you mean. May I hope that I may claim you as mine?"

After a little pause she said, "I am very sorry, but I am afraid that our paths through life will have to diverge."

He, expostulated, of course; then, heaving a deep sigh, walked away.

The twilight deepened, and I still rested my eyes. After a while the disconsolate lover returned, and renewed his suit, saying: "I have spent fifteen wretched minutes. Can you give me no hope?"

Her voice in the gloaming sounded like music to him, I have no doubt, as she answered: "I have been thinking over what I told you. No one knows what will be in the future, and perhaps our paths may converge."

Just then the whistle blew for my station, and gathering up my possessions, I was preparing to depart, when he exclaimed, joyfully, "Do you get off here? Allow me to help you with them." And with shining eyes he took my satchel and parcels, and helped me off, even controlling himself so far as to bow respectfully as I left.

On looking back I could see the lady in my seat by the window, and the happy lover sitting by her side. The whistle blew, the train started, and—the curtain fell.—Harper's Magazine for March.

Detained on the Road.

"When I lived in Kansas," said a Detroiter, who was telling stories in an insurance office a few days ago, "I insured my house with an agent against fire. Along came another agent who insured against lightning, and I took that in. In a few days a chap called on me who insured against cyclones, and I struck a bargain with him. The next caller insured against water spouts and explosions, and I thought I might as well encourage him."

"A house couldn't be much safer than that," remarked one of the listeners.

"And yet I lost it inside of six months."

"How could it be?"

"Well, there came a freshet in the river and house, barn, fences, haystacks and all went sailing down stream. The agent who insured against freshets got there just one day too late."—Detroit Free Press.

Hancock's Courtship.

A Cleveland Leader correspondent writes: After Hancock graduated from West Point his first duty was in connection with an exploring party in the west. On his way there he stopped for a short time at St. Louis, and it was his custom there to take a horseback ride every morning. As he rode down one of the streets one bright, sunny day when it was still early, he saw at the window of one of the finest-looking houses in the city a very beautiful young lady. His eye caught her's as he passed, and he involuntarily raised his hat. The young lady blushed, waved her hand at him, and then stepped back into the shadow. As the story goes, it was a case of love at first sight on Hancock's part. Morning after morning he rode past that house hoping to see her again. At last one day he passed by on foot just as she was leaving the house on the arm of an old gentleman. The lady recognized him again, as he could see by her blushes, but she did not bow, and just as he passed she entered a carriage. The old gentleman followed her and the two drove rapidly away. I shall not describe how Hancock took a cab and kept the carriage in sight, nor how gratified he was when after a short ride he saw it draw up at the door of one of his old army comrades. A moment later he had dismissed the cab, and knocked at his friend's house. His friend met him in the hall, and in a stammering way he asked for an introduction to the lady. A moment later he was taken into the parlor and introduced to Miss Almira Russell and her father. Old Mr. Russell was one of the rich merchants of St. Louis. He took quickly to Hancock, and before he left the house that afternoon the young officer received a hearty invitation to call, which, by the way, the young lady seconded. Hancock did call, and he called often. The pretty young lady seemed to be as much attracted to the gay young lieutenant as the lieutenant was to her. After a short courtship they became engaged, and a short time later were married.

R. W. MUNCASTER,

The Daily Examiner.

SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1886.

THE death of Col. George B. Corkhill, the District Attorney who prosecuted Guiteau, Garfield's assassin, is announced.

NOTWITHSTANDING the anti-Chinese agitation, the census taken in the city of Victoria, B. C., recently, shows that the Chinese male population exceeds that of the white male population by one hundred and eleven.

THE allegation that $4,000 was paid four members of parliament, government supporters, as the price of their influence, has been satisfactorily explained—to the average Tory mind. It was only paid to one. The question naturally arises whether it is lesse corrupt to vest a corruption fund of $4,000 in one beneficiary than to spread it out over four.

TORONTO city hasn't a bad claim to be the hub of Ontario after all. This year her assessed value is some three millions and a half greater than last year. The estimated expenditure of the whole province of Ontario this year is $2,960,000, while the civic budget of Toronto, brought down on Thursday, calls for an expenditure this year of $2,815,000. Not so bad for the erstwhile "Little Muddy York." The mud still remains but the city has outgrown very decidedly the diminutive portion of the title.

THE Tory "victory" in Prince Edward Island in the recent general provincial elections is about this size:—Seventeen Tories elected to thirteen Liberals and one of the members of the Tory government defeated. And only this result when Sir John wrote a letter abjectly appealing to his Conservative supporters to rally around the Standard. The Mail denies by implication that Sir John so wrote, saying that there was one of the candidates named John A. Macdonald. But the letter written, was dated "Earnscliffe" and post-marked "Ottawa." A little white lie wont answer. He who lies to defend Sir John, must lay it on strong.

THE Toronto World thinks the people are not as highly taxed as they should be. It advocates the imposition of $5 a ton on imported pig iron so that iron can be manufactured in Canada. This is certainly a cool proposition, which simply amounts to making Canada pay so much more for iron and articles into which iron enters as a material, for the sake of making some aggregation of monopolist's rich. What will it profit the house wife, if she has to pay $1.50 for an iron pot instead of $1.00, or the farmer, if he has to pay $2 instead of $1.50 for a set of horse shoes. True, the iron industry would give employment to some laborers, but the country is wide and the national advantage would be greater, by putting these men to work on the farming lands now lying waste, than by having them sweat their lives away in smelting works, to make some monopolists wealthy. This would be the first step towards creating a market for iron, that would make the manufacture of it profitable, without constant coddling at the expense of the taxpayers. Iron smelting can be made profitable it appears, then, not, through the operation of the commercial principle of supply and demand, but by directly taking money out of the pockets of all the taxpayers and putting it into the coffers of the manufactures of iron. Any business can be made to pay if the people are forced to supply the dividends.

"A Lot of Thieves."

As may have been noticed in the reports of various trades and labor councils and memorials from Knights of Labor, the wage-workers of the country have not forgotten the expression used by Hon. Frank Smith—that the Knights of Labor are "a lot of thieves."

It is very proper that this should be remembered. The government that will retain a man so notoriously unfit for any public place, in their service, after he has unjustly denounced and calumniated one of the largest sections of the community, proves that the working classes can hope for no good treatment or for any beneficial legislation at the hands of Sir John's cabinet. It therefore appears that the only way to rid ourselves of Hon. Frank Smith, as a cabinet minister, is to dismiss the whole cabinet and declare primarily in favor of more honest men, and then to set about reorganizing our system.

Frank Smith was not elected to the position; he was appointed. The same government that made his appointment have been requested to cancel it, but it has not been done; and the Knights of Labor and the wage-workers of Canada may now consider that Sir John and his government join unanimously with Frank Smith in believing that all trades unionists are "theives," and undeserving of countenance or support. We again remind Sir John what he will find to be a fact, that these people have good memories.—Toronto News.

FLOUR.

There seems to be some misapprehension relative to the price of Flour. I find a number of purchasers stating that the grade of Flour known as has been reduced to $2.25 per one hundred pounds. This is a mistake. I offer, in common with all other dealers and millers, a good Family Flour at $2.25, but the brand "Bakers" is still retailed at $2.50 per hundred.

P. P. FLOUR for Pastry, $2.75 per Hundred

BAKER'S FLOUR (ground from Manitoba Hard and Ontario Spring Wheat), $2.50 per Hundred.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

The governess, remembering all that Sir Oswald wished, tried in vain to represent their visitor in a more favorable light. Miss Darrell simply looked haughty and unconvinced.

"I am years younger than you," she said, at last, "and have seen nothing of what you call 'life'; but the instinct of my own heart tells me that he is false in heart, in mind, in soul; he has a false, flattering tongue, false lips, false principles—we will not speak of him."

Miss Hastings looked at her sadly.

"Do you not think that in time, perhaps, you may like him better?"

"No," was the blunt reply. "I do not. I told him that I did not like him, but that I would take some time to consider whether he was to be a friend of mine or not; and the conclusion I have arrived at is, that I could not endure his friendship."

"When did you tell him that you did not like him?" asked Miss Hastings, gravely.

"I think it was the first night he came," she replied.

Miss Hastings looked relieved.

"Did he say anything else to you, Pauline?" she asked, gently.

"No; what should he say? He seemed very much surprised, I suppose, as he says most people like him. But I do not, and never shall."

One thing was certain, the captain was falling most passionately in love with Miss Darrell. Her grand beauty, her pride, her originality, all seemed to have an irresistible charm for him.

CHAPTER XI.

ELINOR ROCHEFORD.

It was a morning in August, when a gray mist hung over the earth, a mist that resulted from the intense heat, and through which trees, flowers, and fountains loomed faintly like shadows. The sun showed his bright face at intervals, but, though he withheld his gracious presence, the heat and warmth were great; the air was laden with perfume, and the birds were all singing as though they knew that the sun would soon reappear.

One glance at her pupil's face showed Miss Hastings there was not much to be done in the way of study. Pauline wanted to watch the mist rise from the hills and trees. She wanted to see the sunbeams grow bright and golden.

"Let us read under the lime trees, Miss Hastings," she said, and Captain Langton smiled approval. For the time was come when he followed her like her shadow; when he could not exist out of her presence; when his passionate love mastered him, and brought him, a very slave, to her feet; when the hope of winning her was dearer to him than life itself; when he would have sacrificed even Darrell Court for the hope of calling her his wife.

If she knew of his passion, she made no sign; she never relaxed from her haughty, careless indifference; she never tried in the least to make herself agreeable to him.

Sir Oswald watched her with keen eyes, and Miss Hastings trembled lest misfortune should come upon the girl she was learning to love so dearly. She saw and understood that the baronet was slowly but surely making up his mind; if Pauline married the captain, he would make her his heiress; if not, she would never inherit Darrell Court.

On this August morning they formed a pretty group under the shadowy, graceful limes. Miss Hastings held in her hands some of the fine fancy work which delights ladies; the captain reclined on a tiger-skin rug on the grass, looking very handsome, for, whatever might be his faults of mind, he was one of the handsomest men in England. Pauline, as usual, was beautiful, graceful, and piquant, wearing a plain morning dress of some gray material—a dress which on any one else would have looked plain, but which she had made picturesque and artistic by a dash of scarlet—and a pomegranate blossom in her hair. Her lovely face looked more than usually noble under the influence of the words she was reading.

"Tennyson again!" said the captain, as she opened the book. "It is to be regretted that the poet cannot see you, Miss Darrell, and know how highly you appreciate his works."

She never smiled nor blushed at his compliments, as she had seen other girls do. She had a fashion of fixing her bright eyes on him, and after one glance he generally was overcome with confusion before his compliment was ended.

"I should not imagine that anything I could say would flatter a poet," she replied thoughtfully. "Indeed he is, I should say, as far above blame as praise."

Then, without noticing him further, she went on reading. Captain Langton's eyes never left her face; its pale, grand beauty glowed and changed, the dark eyes grew radiant, the beautiful lips quivered with emotion. He thought to himself that a man might lay down his life and every hope in it to win such love as hers.

Suddenly she heard the sound of voices, and looking up saw Sir Oswald escorting two ladies.

"What a tiresome thing!" grumbled the captain. "We can never be alone a single hour."

"I thought you enjoyed society so much?" she said.

"I am beginning to care for no society on earth but yours," he whispered, his face flushing, while she turned haughtily away.

"You are proud," murmured the captain to himself, "you are as haughty as you are beautiful; but I will win you yet."

Then Sir Oswald, with his visitors, advanced. It was Pauline's aversion, Lady Hampton, with her niece, Miss Rocheford.

Lady Hampton advanced in her usual grave, artificial manner.

"Sir Oswald wanted to send for you, but I said 'no.' What can be more charming than such a group under the trees? I am so anxious to introduce my niece to you, Miss Darrell—she arrived only yesterday. Elinor, let me introduce you to Miss Darrell, Miss Hastings, and Captain Langton."

Pauline's dark eyes glanced at the blushing, sweet face, and the shrinking, graceful figure. Miss Hastings made her welcome; and the captain, stroking his mustache, thought himself in luck for knowing two such pretty girls.

There could not have been a greater contrast than Pauline Darrell and Elinor Rocheford. Pauline was dark, proud, beautiful, passionate, haughty, and willful, yet with a poet's soul and a grand mind above all worldliness, all meanness, all artifice. Elinor was timid, shrinking, graceful, lovely, with a delicate, fairy-like beauty, yet withal keenly alive to the main chance, and never forgetting her aunt's great maxim—to make the best of everything for herself.

On this warm August morning Miss Rocheford wore a charming grass-linen costume of lilac and white, with the daintiest of Parisian hats on her golden head. Her gloves, shoes, laces, parasol, were perfection—not a fold was out of place, not a ribbon awry—contrasting most forcibly with the grand, picturesque girl near her.

Lady Hampton seated herself, and Miss Rocheford did the same. Sir Oswald suggesting how very refreshing grapes and peaches would be on so warm a morning, Captain Langton volunteered to go and order some. Lady Hampton watched him as he walked away.

"What a magnificent man, Sir Oswald! What a fine clever face! It is easy to see that he is a military man—he is so upright, so easy; there is nothing like a military training for giving a man an easy, dignified carriage. I think I understood that he was the son of a very old friend of yours?"

"The son of the dearest friend I ever had in the world," was the reply; "and I love him as though he were my own—indeed I wish he were."

Lady Hampton sighed and looked sympathetic.

"Langton," she continued, in a musing tone—"is he one of the Langtons of Orde?"

"No," replied Sir Oswald; "my dear old friend was of a good family, but not greatly blessed by fortune."

It was wonderful to see how Lady Hampton's interest in the captain at once died out; there was no more praise, no more admiration for him. If she had discovered that he was heir to an earldom, how different it would have been! Before long the captain returned, and then a rustic table was spread under the lime trees, with purple grapes, peaches, crimson and gold apricots, and ruddy plums.

"It's quite picturesque," Lady Hampton declared, with a smile; "and Elinor, dear child, enjoys fruit so much."

In spite of Lady Hampton's wish, there did not appear to be much cordiality between the two girls. Occasionally Elinor would look at the captain, who was not slow to return her glances with interest. His eyes said plainly that he thought her very lovely.

Miss Rocheford was in every respect the model of a well brought up young lady. She knew that the grand end and aim of her existence was to marry well—she never forgot that. She was well-born, well-bred, beautiful, accomplished, but without fortune. From her earliest girlhood Lady Hampton had impressed upon her the duty of marrying money.

"You have everything else, Elinor," she was accustomed to say. "You must marry for title and money."

Miss Rocheford knew it. She had no objection to her fate—she was quite passive over it—but she did hope at times that the man who had the title and money would be young, handsome, and agreeable. If he were not, she could not help it, but she hoped he would be.

Balshazzar's Warning.

"Tried in the balance and found wanting," is the general verdict rendered against most of the so-called cures for lung troubles. Such a decision has never been given against Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." On the contrary, it is conceded by thousands who have tried it, to be the only remedy for consumption (scrofula of the lungs) and scrofulous diseases generally. It will not cure when both lungs are most gone, but if taken when the disease is in the first stages it never fails. It is also specific for such scrofulous affections as fever-sores, white swellings, hip-joint disease, and great eating ulcers, and for blood taints generally, from whatever cause arising. By druggists.

The railway under construction between League Lake and Lake Temiscaming is almost completed, but locomotives will not be placed thereon until the tramways between Mattawa and the former point are ready for traffic, which it is expected will be about July 15. It is also expected that a line of steamers will soon be running between Mattawa and the foot of Long Sault.

Mr. W. H. Bowlby, at a public meeting in Berlin in the interests of the Corset Factory By-law, said that while they had buttons, leather, furniture, shirts, and almost everything else manufactured in the town, they hadn't anything to go around the ladies' waists, and the Berlin News repudiates the remark as an undeserved reflection on the young men of the town.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pay them a larger profit, the consumer being the loser thereby.

Mr. Harry Eilsler, of the Eilsler-Wels Opera Company, was arrested on Monday for producing the Mikado on British soil, in defiance of the sole right to produce the opera in Canada held by Mr. John Stetson, of the Fifth-avenue Theatre, New York. CONSUMPTION, which is Scrofulous Disease of the Lungs, is promptly and certainly arrested and cured by this God-given remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its wonderful power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all

Daniel Beard Dead.

Daniel Beard, of Belleville, the fireman scalded at the Onemee railway accident, died yesterday afternoon, shortly after two o'clock. Information Wanted.

Sometime ago a gentleman called at this office and ordered the EXAMINER to be sent to Mr. W. Leahey, Helena, Montana, and we have received an intimation from the post master at that place, that the paper is not taken out, for the reason that Mr. Leahey never calls and is not known to the Montana postoffice. Will the gentlemen who ordered the paper sent, kindly communicate with the EXAMINER, as the only memo we possess consists of the entry in the cash book of the amount of the subscription.

Highly Complimentary.

Mr. Geo. A. Morrison, agent for the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, of New York, has received the following complimentary letter:—

"New York, 3rd July, 1886.

Geo. A. Morrison, Esq., agent for Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, Peterborough, Ont.:

DEAR SIR,—On behalf of our association, allow me to congratulate you on the class of business you have been sending to us for the last year. Mr. Measies, the local treasurer's report for the month of June, is at hand, and no lapsed policies. We understand that the old liners have been distributing that disgraceful circular to which they have not the honesty or manliness to attach their names, and trying in every way to interfere with your policy-holders. Notwithstanding those unsuccessful attacks, we are receiving from all parts of the continent a steadily increasing new business.

Yours truly,
F. T. BRAMAN,
Secretary."

Obituary.

On Friday, Mr. Samuel McKibbin of Smith, met with another severe bereavement in the death of his only son, Wellington H., at the age of 26 years. The sister of the deceased, and only daughter of the family, died about two years ago. The deceased young man was married about a year and a half ago to Miss Sutton of Lakefield. The family have the sympathy of the entire community in the bereavement which leaves the father and mother childless and the young wife widowed.

Monster Moss of Bloom.

The residence of Mr. John McKee, druggist, was a place of more than ordinary attraction last night. His Night Blooming Cereus burst into flower at that time. The plant, which is of the cactus family, blooms only once a year and then at night, the flower remaining expanded only a short time. About 6 o'clock last night, Mr. McKee's Cereus began to expand and it rapidly pushed its petals abroad till 2 o'clock, midnight, when it was in full bloom. So rapid was the expansion that it was distinctly visible. When in full bloom the flower measured eleven inches in diameter. The outer row of petals was of a pinkish color and the remainder white. The spectacle is a rare one and about forty persons had the pleasure of witnessing it last night. To-night Mr. McKee expects another bud to open and he will pleased to afford his friends the pleasure of witnessing the rare and beautiful sight.

The Best of the Season.

The excursion to Toronto on Tuesday next, July 13th, under the auspices of Court Peterborough, No. 29, Canadian Order of Foresters, promises to be the largest patronized and undoubtedly the most popular excursion of the season. A trip to the Queen City at any time for $2.15 would be well worth taking, but will be especially so on this occasion. On the afternoon of Tuesday, the grand parade and demonstration of the Knights of Pythias, from all over the world, numbering about 20,000, will take place. The city will be decorated to an extent never before attempted, and in itself will be well worth the price of the trip. An international league game of baseball between the Rochesters and Torontos will also be an attractive feature. These with hundreds of other attractions should ensure success. The return tickets good for eight days, are only $2.15. Every arrangement has been made to secure the comfort of excursionists and they cannot fail to have a good time. The Fire Brigade Band will be along. The train leaves the Peterborough station at 7 a. m. For further particulars consult bills. All aboard!

Alford vs. Court Peterborough.

This was a suit brought by Mrs. Sarah Alford, to recover the sum of $30, the amount of funeral benefits claimed to be due the plaintiff by virtue of her husband's membership of Court Peterborough, No. 29, Canadian Order of Foresters. The case was tried by Judge Weller and a jury at the Division Court yesterday and caused considerable interest. The following clause of the endowment law of the Order furnished the grounds of contesting the claim of the plaintiff, in which the High Court indemnified the local court:—

13th. Any court member found guilty after due trial of contravening any section of the endowment law or violating any of the rules or usages of the Order, shall thereby forfeit absolutely all claim upon any endowment or other benefit fund of the Order, but may be restored to the privileges of the Order at the discretion of the R. W. High Court or of the Executive Committee.

Several witness were called to prove the justification of the Court's action under the above claims, in the matter of the personal habits of deceased.

His Honor in giving the case to the jury, took the grounds that according to the constitution and by-laws, the agreement with the deceased was an absolute one and should be carried out. He submitted two questions to be answered by the jury. Was the death of the plaintiff's husband caused through the use of intoxicants? which was answered in the negative, and the other was, was the deceased a contributing member at the time of his death? which was answered in the affirmative. A verdict was recorded for the plaintiff—Mr. Burnham for plaintiff, Mr. Moore for defendants.

Damages Against Chief Cooper.

The case of Kearns vs. Cooper, in which Wm. Kearns, of Burleigh, claimed $60 damages, for injuries and loss of time resulting from such injuries, on account of an assault committed upon him by Chief Cooper, was disposed of at the Division Court yesterday. The assault complained of was committed in the police court on June 3rd. John Kearns, son of the plaintiff, on the date mentioned was convicted of an infraction of the Scott Act, and on stating that he had no distress, was committed to gaol for two months. Kearns asked if his father could be made to pay the fine. The magistrate replied that he could not. Kearns then drew from his pocket a roll of bills, which he handed or tossed to his father. Chief Cooper acting on the order of the magistrate attempted to seize the bills. In so doing he caught Mr. Kearns by the hand and wrist. After a brief struggle he let the old man go, the magistrate intimating that he should do so. Kearns, aged 60 years, claimed that in the scuffle the Chief Constable scratched his hands, injured him internally and shocked his nervous system, to such an extent that he lost eighteen day's work, at $3 per day. The defence admitted that an assault had been committed, but of such a mild nature that the plaintiff could not have been injured by it, and endeavored to show that the plaintiff thought nothing of the matter until advised by his solicitor, when he consulted a physician. The judge asked the jury to consider whether the assault complained of, which was admitted, had caused any bodily injury to the plaintiff and towhat extent, and to give their verdict accordingly. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, allowing $25 damages. Mr. John Burnham, appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. A. P. Poussette, Q.C., for the defendant.

EGAN'S IMPERIAL TRUSS

Read the following extract from a letter of a well-known citizen of St. Catharines,—hundreds like it:

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 28th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two springless trusses made in York State, costing me $60. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. Sermon to Orangemen.

Rev. I. Tovell Delivers a Special and Eloquent Sermon to the Local Lodges of Orangemen, at St. Paul's Church.

The members of Loyal Orange Lodges No's. 49 and 80, of Peterborough, Nassau Lodge and McWilliams Lodge of True Blues, attended divine worship at St. Paul's church yesterday. The lodges assembled at the Orange Hall, George street, attired in their regalia, where they formed in procession and, headed by the full Fire Brigade band, marched to the church, where Rev. I. Tovell addressed the brethren, delivering an able and appropriate sermon, which is given verbatim. The reverend gentleman took his text from the 17th verse, second chapter of the 1st epistle of Peter:—

"Honor all men, love the brotherhood, fear God, honor the king."

Twelve months ago we were assembled in this sacred edifice on a similar occasion to this. It seems but yesterday—so rapid has been the flight of time—and yet 365 days have marked the interval, "Time flies on restless pinions."

All of your number of last year are not with you to-day. One at least is missing. Stalwart he stood beside you then, now he sleeps in our beautiful cemetery. With tender affection you placed him there, and laid upon the casket the emblems of your sorrow and hope. Beside that grave it was my pathetic privilege to stand and read these words of our blessed Lord, "I am the Resurrection and the Life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." In this great truth is our hope. All our consolation is in this.

There is a lesson in this bereavement that I trust none will fail to learn. Our opportunity is at hand, let not the days go by misimproved. The life to come is hastening on. It is for us to be ready for "the Son of Man cometh at such an hour as ye think not."

WHAT IS OUR DUTY?

The text selected for this occasion furnishes us with words of exhortation and counsel that will be familiar to the members of the Orange brotherhood; as they are woven into the constitution of your society. Every thoughtful man desires to make the best of life's privileges; he wants to know his duty; he desires to serve his day and generation aright; and he wishes to understand the claims which God, the Father, has upon him. He says: "What are my responsibilities?" "What is expected of me?" "What are my obligations to my fellows?" "As a citizen of a great commonwealth, as a member of the church it may be, as one of a family group, what is the ideal life to be followed?"

Much light is thrown upon such questions by this one brief passage of inspired Scriptures, when Peter says: "Honor all men, love the brotherhood, fear God, honor the king." Our relation to mankind and the obligation arising therefrom is here brought out. Our duty to the members of a particular brotherhood is here given; our attitude to God, and our rightful service to the State are also mentioned. Let us, therefore, turn to these words to-day with a prayerful heart that we may not only learn these things mentioned, but be ready to do them. "For if ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

BROTHERLY LOVE.

The first injunction given is to "honor all men." Paul, in another part of the Scriptures, says: "Be kindly affectioned one towards another, in brotherly love, in honor preferring one another." The margin reads, "Esteem all men." It would seem consistent with these words to teach the duty, of duly appreciating character in its moral worth, no matter what the creed or nationality may be of the persons concerned. To be able, and to find it a pleasure to do this is an indication of the presence of noble qualities of heart and mind in the person speaking or thinking of another. It is easy and common to be cynical, the power to depreciate often quite overshadows the ability to appreciate worth. Fault-finding is probably commoner than merit-praising, even where there is abundant room for the latter. Our eyes are trained to see defects that ought to be educated to see the virtues that adorn the lives of our fellows; we are cunning at pulling down noble reputations, but slow at helping to build up these real though invisible structures. As example, take the hero of the Reformation. There were those who spoke of Martin Luther as though he were only fit for the prison, the grave, and hell. While struggling for the civil and religious liberty of the people, he was branded as a heretic, an atheist, and a reprobate of the blackest kind. History has another and a better word to say of him to-day. Paul also had the worst epithets given to his name—"babbler,"—a "disturber of the peace,"—an enemy of commerce, for his ministry spoiled the trade in images of idolatry, and so forth; but Paul's ministry was of a righteousness that exalts the nations. Christ himself was spoken of as an impostor, a glutton, a winebibber, a teacher of sedition. It is easy, you see, to fling daubs of mud on to the elegantly frescoed ceiling of the temple, but it is a rarer thing to look with candor and judge of the intellectual piece portrayed.

TERRIBLE TREATMENT.

What terrible treatment is given to some of the princes among men! Especially is this true in the sphere of politics. John Bright is an "old woman," says Parnell, W. E. Gladstone is a "traitor," says Churchill. To read the party press at a time when elections are pending, it would seem as if honor was there gone forever from both parties. Long life friendships are broken, the dictionary is exhausted of its hard words to fling at each other. Catholics curse the Protestants, and Protestants the Catholics, the French foam through English interference, and the English growl at the French audacity, Tories wangle Reformers, and Reformers pound away at the Tories; they bite and devour each other. Are not these things so? And yet I must say that in view of the tremendous interests at stake in Great Britain at present, that probably no example in good has ever been given to the world of a political conflict in which there were less personalities indulged in, and an ardent advocacy of principle and polity pursued. This is a hopeful sign.

GOOD REPORT

What a beauty and pleasing interest would be added to life if every one gave himself up to a candid acknowledgment of whatsoever things are lovely and honest and of good report among men. If there were no intentional misrepresentations made, if there were no malicious slanders spoken, if there were no wilful lies uttered, if there were no dust thrown into men's eyes, but the real facts only set forth, how blessed and how prosperous would our nations become, what a security would be given to good lives, and good reputations, and good characters. But the reverse obtains, yonder comes a man across the way, he has been out over the rich clover fields, and up the green slopes of the mountains, and through the thickly foliaged and heavily fruited orchard, also has explored the bed of the finely flowing river beyond. See his hands are laden with many things, he comes with samples of the things discovered; what has he gleaned? What, but thistles, shedding their down and dead thornbushes, and faded heather, and a bunch of the poison ivy, and little serpents, and sour grapes, and decayed wood? There he says are samples of your fields and woods and orchards and streams; these are the gatherings of days of hard toil, they were actually found where I have been." But let another go, and he instead, will bring loads of fragrant cedar, and sweet smelling clover, he will bring you vines bending with ripe fruit, and hallitopse and many other flowers of rarest fragrance, he will tell you of the cascades singing through the woodlands, and the larks warbling over the meadow fields. This latter friend does justice to this fields and vineyards and hills. That which was most abundant, he brought samples of, and they were excellent.

HONOR OPPONENTS.

Are we not challenged in the text to do likewise in our treatment of men who are worthy? We need to eliminate the unkindness, as far as possible, that obtains. Let Gladstone's treatment of John Bright stand forth before you, if you are ever engaged in political strife with an honorable opponent, and let the example prompt to actions equally as praise-worthy. To your antagonist one who differs from you in religion let not your anathemas be buried against him, but rather, remember that the word says "Honor all men." The world waits for honor to be enthroned in the hearts of men. Tribute to whom tribute is due, and honor to whom honor. These given and the world will brighten. The next injunction is closely related to the first, which is to "Love the brotherhood." The term "brotherhood" implies an organization. The organization, constitution, and governing laws of this organization are defined in the Gospels Acts and Epistles of the New Testament. It was called The Church. Its officers were presbyters or bishops, elders and deacons. Among its members were apostles, evangelists, teachers, for the ministry of the word. Its members were not confined to any one nationality, but all nations and kindreds could enter. These members held public meetings at which they sang and prayed, read together the Word of God, and worshipped Christ. The condition of membership was simple,—"repentance towards God, and faith towards the Lord Jesus Christ." The character of this membership was unique. All were made "new creatures"—created anew in Christ Jesus. Remarkable experiences came to them at times. Once when assembled for prayer the Holy Ghost from heaven descended upon them, the sound was like that of a mighty rushing wind, and there appeared unto them, cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, and they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. Some who were looking on and heard them thought they were drunk, but Peter rose and explained, and that day 3000 were enrolled as members.

DISCIPLE ALL NATIONS.

The Society had an object. They were organized for a purpose. The boldness and grandeur of their purpose is simply overwhelming. It was to disciple all nations,—to make Christians of all men. This meant a conflict with principalities of evil more terrible than could be told in words. A spirit of hatred broke out that burned with relentless fury in many places. The wolf of persecution was let loose upon the disciples, still they continued steadfast, witnessing for the truth as it is in Jesus.

The further and fuller history of this brotherhood I cannot undertake to give, so small at first in members, now almost innumerable. At one period one in sympathy and in Christian effort, then torn asunder by differences in faith, or forms of government, or ecclesiastical notions and assumptions. In one era preeminent for pity and spiritual aspirations, and in another all the streams of godliness stagnant and corrupt. Walking in the light of the Gospel for the first few centuries, then later overshadowed with the dark clouds of superstition and corruption. From such a sky the thunder peal of the Reformation broke forth and the showers of holy blessings fell.

THE BROTHERHOOD.

This was the brotherhood that Peter had in his mind when he said, "Love the brotherhood. A brotherhood of saved souls, a brotherhood among whom dwelt remarkable men and women, one from Tarsus, of unrivalled intellectual power another from Cyprus, of large and tender heart, one from Lystra, young, ardent and faithful another from Jerusalem, brave and pure and brilliant. Splendid women graced the roll also, Lydia, famed for her hospitality, Dorcas, most generous towards the poor, Priscilla, versed in Bible literature, and others of equal merit. That roll has increased for 1800 years, till its numbers reach into the millions; a brotherhood having the stamps of the Father in Heaven upon them; a brotherhood that has given to the world a civilization unequalled; a brotherhood in full sympathy with the spread of knowledge, and with the progress of the truth.

Today this brotherhood is divided into families bearing different names, or into battalions of varied merit. Sometimes these groups so far forget themselves as to bite and devour each other, but a brighter day is coming when love will be the universal law. That day ought to be here now. It is time, high time, when envyings, and jealousies, and prejudices ought to be destroyed. We are blameable if we perpetuate these old fires that our ancestors may have kindled, which were not the fires of Pentecostal power. The atmosphere should be encharged with the spirit of union; when the families of Christians should be of one mind and of one heart in things essential to salvation. We are advancing towards this. A summer day is coming when the churches will body forth the spirit of the 13th of 1st Corinthians. Then "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples because ye have love one for another."

LAWS OF LOVE.

Your organization, my friends, I trust is governed by this law of love. Your religious beliefs may differ, your political creeds may not be alike, your social tastes and temperaments may vary, yet these need not, and I hope do not disturb that bond of good-feeling that is essential to your peace and prosperity. Being but a visitor among you I am not able to know the inwardness of your association, but I am prone to believe the "esprit de corps" is an element deep and strong among you. This is as it should be so long as your aims be high and deserving. So long as you abhor that which is evil and cleave to that which is good, so long as you are faithful to the principle of freedom for which your fathers contended, so long as you are loyal to the faith of our beloved Protestantism, and true to the claims of home, and to the demands of the state, then your unity cannot be too strong. But I would not fester within you a narrow spirit. I would not kindle your wrath and turn it towards any body of men, I would not have you sensor to be vigilant, for vigilance is the price of freedom, but I would not have you hold men today responsible for all the follies of their forefathers, for they are not responsible. Make room then in your hearts for every fair, honest, true fellow citizen, of whatever color or religion he may be. And be fair and honest and true yourselves, that you may worthily live in their esteem also. "Love the Brotherhood of the Nations."

FEAR GOD.

The third command in the text is solemn, imperative, and all important, "Fear God." The words remind us of those uttered by Solomon when he said "Fear God and Keep His Commandments," for this is the whole duty of man. In another place it is written "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of Wisdom." And again, "The mercy of the Lord, is upon them that fear Him." These are passages, plain and complete, indicating to us the feeling most becoming the heart of man in view of the character of God and the claims He has upon our service and worship. Reverence, awe, adoration, these are due Him to whom belongeth both mercy and power. A lack of these is a mark of character that is fallen and depraved, and destitute of that spirit of truth which makes the soul sensible of the glory of the Divine. One among many instances of a true relation to God is given in the 10th of Acts. Cornelius is the man. "He was a just man, and one that feared God." Peter finding Cornelius, said of him, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of Him." This is an enunciation of a great practical truth. It unites two great truths together, making the latter the outcome of the former—the fear of God in the heart, resulting in working out righteousness in the life. They are as cause and effect. They are the complements of each other. They are inseparable. Cornelius incorporated them into his experience and thus lifted himself into an example for others. He was not all profession. His piety was not that transcendental cloudland thing, that never touched this hard practical world.

THE STANDARD TYPE OF LIFE.

This is the standard type of life for all to follow, namely working righteousness, doing right, because of that filial fear that means pleasure in pleasing God. Let that piety go as being worthless that does not make the every-day life of men consistent with the truth. It is not the religion of the Bible. Dishonesty in business, deceit in statements, injury done to the morals of the young or old, wrongs committed in any way affecting our fellows, being false in promises, and unjust in deeds, indulging in acts of licentiousness, given to vice in any form, addicted to drunkenness, practised in the art of cunning and treachery, heedless of the claims of the poor, deaf to the sobs of the broken-hearted, allowing the temper to go unbridled, craving forbidden pleasures, greedy to become rich, guilty of extortion, devouring widow's houses, these, and many kindred vices and crimes are utterly inconsistent with the profession of a Godly fear. These never grow to such a vine.

FILIAL FEAR OF GOD.

And now, my friends, having spoken to you of the honor due to all men, of the love we owe to one another, and of the filial fear that leads to practical Godliness, I come now to address a few closing words in regard to our duty to our king and country. The text calls upon us to honor the king. Every man should be a patriot; he should love his country. If an American, let him be true to the flag that floats as a symbol of power and protection; if an Italian, let him love her classic shores; if a Hebrew, let him never forget Jerusalem. The spirit of patriotism should glow in every heart and swell in every breast. No man can honor the king and not cherish a deep interest in the land of his nativity or adoption.

As Canadian citizens and subjects of Great Britain, we have enough in our history to evoke the utmost enthusiasm as patriots, and I pity that man, nay, I almost despise that man who, living on Canadian or British soil has little or no inspiration to cheer at the very sight of his country's flag. What fertile fields, what noble rivers, what beautiful lakes, what vast areas of productive soil God has given to us. All these are dear to the patriotic heart. Then listen to the roar of our factories, the crackle of our furnaces, the beat of our hammers, the hum of our engines, and these should stir the soul to admiration and gratitude. Better still, what privileges of education are ours, what achievements in literature and science are due to men of our nation, what liberties in worship we enjoy, how sacred is home, how grand the struggles of the past to give us laws that are just, all these make the subject a debtor to the extent of a patriotic devotion—unalloyed by indifference or selfishness—to all the interests of the country.

I am fully in accord with these words of the poet when he said:—

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said;
This is my own, my native land,
As home his footsteps he hath turned,
From wandering on a foreign strand!
If such there be, go mark him well,
For him no minstrel raptures swell,
High though his title, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish could claim,

Sermon to Orangemen.

(Concluded.)

Despite these titles, power and gold,
The wretch, concentred all in self,
Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
And double dying shall go down,
To the vile dust from whence he sprang,
Unwept, unhonored, and unsung.

Now, let us not misunderstand what is true patriotism. Do not suppose it means contentment with the past or present. It may glory in much of the past, and it will be true to the good of the present. But patriotism looks into the future and proposes to make it grander than the past. The effort may be a failure The method may not be the best, but the purpose should be to lift the country into a better state than she is at present. There should be no standing still on the part o any nation. Her politics should be purer, her laws juster, and her liberties more secure in the next generation than now. Her people should be wiser, her principles and laws sounder, and her interests greater in the next decade that they are at present. As a patriot (for I think I have a right to claim the title) I pray God to bless our land, to lessen the evils of intemperance, to expose and destroy any subtle influences at work that may threaten our civil privileges, or religious liberties, to help us in the proper education of the young, and to build up a nobler race for the future than any who have lived in the past.

And now friends do not these words "honor the king," carry our thoughts away to the old country, where the question of the Government of Ireland is disturbing the empire.

But let a filial fear of God, nourished in truth and sustained in love, reign in the heart; let God be a precious name in the soul, and an infinite factor in the formation of character, and in the evolving of conduct; and what a life will result from His influence over the soul! Not a Herod's life, dark and infamous, but a John the Baptist's simple, sincere, manly and immortal. Not a Felix life, rotten and repulsive, but a Paul's pure, noble and irresistibly attractive. Not an Ahab's life, black with licentiousness, and base with moral cowardice, but an Elijah's bold, majestic, and holy. Not a Jezebel's life, jealous, treacherous, and full of all manner of uncleanness, but a Mary's of Bethany, refined in sympathy, pure in her affections, of sweet devotion to heavenly pursuits, chaste in her purposes, with a Saviour's smile like light resting on her, because of her choice of the good. These are the lives that come from the influence of a divine and heavenly fear. These are the attributes that compose the character of the true children of God.

My hearers, will you not let the fear of God rule in your hearts. Not a slave's fear. Not a criminal's fear. But a fear like that of a worthy son, who would not grieve his father's heart. Let such a fear possess you, and to-morrow your great day as a society, you conscience will approve of your conduct, for your conduct will be according to the will of God. This fear is the beginning of wisdom, and the precursor of celestial blessings.

IRELAND'S TROUBLE.

I did not intend to go into the Irish question, but a few words on that subject will not be inappropriate. At one time I was in sympathy with Home Rule, and thought it would be the best method of government for Ireland—the country that gave me my mother, and which is probably the birthplace of many of you. After carefully studying the different sides of the many questions, among them the one that should Home Rule be granted Ireland, the minority would be oppressed by the majority. I do not think that Ireland is yet ripe for Home Rule, if it ever will be. The question has been thoroughly investigated and discussed by men of giant minds on both sides, and has been fairly left to the people to decide, and I believe that out of all this trouble there will come forth great good. I believe that God has been in the movement and in this great vote, which has and is being taken. The manner in which the question has been decided would indicate that the unity and peace of the empire is destined to become secure. That any battles that disturb the country will be fought at the polls.

This is the greatest age which has ever been. The Spirit of the Gospel is making its influence felt, and what a century ago would have ended in a civil war, it is gratifying to know will be fought at the polls. Let no threat ever leave your lips against your brethren, even if the struggle should go against you, still trust in God who holds all power, that the day may be far distant when the sword shall be taken from the sheath to be buried in the heart of a brother. By thus being loyal and just you will aid in protecting the Queen, her laws and people from any injustice and injury. May God bless the Queen and our country.

Sunset Cox at the Plow.

In a private letter to the editor of the Syracuse Courier Mr. S. S. Cox relates in his characteristic style his experience at plowing in Turkey: "Mrs. Cox drove me out—I mean a coachman did—upon the grand hills and into the superb valleys that suburb this city. There are, be it known, fine farms and gardens plenty upon these hills. From them one may overlook Asia and almost Africa. Well, we saw a man, a full-breasted, well-turbaned Turk, with a goad and sash of endless length, driving two noble oxen—descendants of the ox which forded here with Europa many centuries ago; worthy to be sacrificed to Jove, who had retired behind Olympus seventy miles away—when I took the plow-handle! There was only one handle. Ceres smiled seriously! I haw'd and gee'd the oxen, but they did not understand the lingo of Ohio cattle. Box and Cox is an old farce, but Ox and Cox—well, I brought out of that field more mud than Cincinnatus did when he left the only 'share' he took stock in, and made Rome howl for him as a patriot and a 'Cult.' My shoeblack charged me five piastres extra for the soil I did not turn up, except on my boots! And this from the farmer's friend; just from the sciatic court, and in view of an Asciatic, who regarded my effort with earthly gravity! Seriously, there are splendid drives about here. Indeed, some say the Turks themselves will have a drive! The war seems imminent—1st March. The armistice lasts till then. The Serbs are mad 'cause they were licked; the Russians mad because they did not help the Prince lick them; and the Turk looks on and says: 'Kismet!' He will have to leave some time."

After-Dinner Poems.

Not much, perhaps, is to be anticipated from an after-dinner poem. Its office is very nearly the same as that of the bouquets and garlands which adorn a festival. These are expected to look bright and smell sweet for a few hours, and then to drop to pieces and be swept away with the other litter of the banquet. A great deal of very cheap and trivial verse is produced for such occasions, and has done its duty well enough if it has made its ten or fifteen minutes pass pleasantly. Sometimes it will bear showing up in the newspaper of the next morning, but if it is to be read in cold blood it must have something workmanlike in its construction. A few easily taken puns, new or old, a few local allusions, a patriotic sentiment, a little judicious flattery of the company, will do well enough, if put together with a very moderate amount of skill, to keep in good humor an audience already in the tranquil stage of digestion and the amiably receptive condition which goes with it.

But there is no reason why one should not write the verses which are to be recited or sung after a feast, or for any other occasional object, just as well as if they were suggested by a daisy, or a mouse, or a bed of daffodils, or the reading of Chapman's Homer, or stumbling over a broken statue, as Burns, Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, have done. The accidental cause is not the main thing; it is the imaginative, or fanciful, or witty treatment of it which we care for. —Oliver Wendell Holmes, in March Atlantic.

Paper is about to monopolize another branch of industry, which is no less a one than the making of gentlemen's head gear. By a new process of manipulation, hats more serviceable and finer than anything now in the market are made of wood pulp. They are impervious to water and not wanting in flexibility. It is believed that felt hats will have to take a back seat as soon as these new hats can be placed on the market in sufficient numbers to supply the demand. They are certain to revolutionize the hatters' trade, as they can be molded into any shape or style desired, and colored to meet the taste of the public. They can be made to represent a glossy or nappy appearance.

A Placid Fraud Exposed.

The most placid fraud in the world is the man whose taste in wine is infallible. Most of them rely almost entirely on the label and the bottle to tell the brand, and if is a well-known fact that the restaurants who affect the expensive luxuries of cabinet life make piles of money out of the gullibility of the young man who knows all about wines. I suppose that in the business there are plenty of men whose palates have to be learned on the subject, but there is hardly one man out of a thousand professing wine experts who can not be caught. As for spirits, I judge it is even worse. They had a dispute about two brands of whisky in one of the clubs here the other day. An expert who had been growling about the quality of the club's stock was asked to decide for himself between the two. He tasted and decided.

"That's all right," said a club man. "That's the whisky you've been growling about."

"Well, the other's worse," was the way the growler got out of it. "I don't say that's good."

"Well, the other isn't whisky at all. It's brandy."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Clerical Error.

Jim Webster was on his way home one day last week, when he met his friend, Sam Johnsing.

"Whar's you gwine, Sam?"

"Nowhar's in pertickerler, Jim."

"Come home wid me and habe some dinner. We has got some yeller legged chicken for dinner."

Arriving at Jim Webster's house, they failed to find Mrs. Webster in, but on looking out the back door they perceived her hanging some clothes on a line to dry. She was not alone. Standing in front of her, with a heavenly smile on his features, casting admiring glances at her, and patting her gently on her saddle colored cheeks was Rev. Whangdoodle Baxter, pastor of the Austin Blue Light tabernacle. Sam Johnsing nudged his friend in the side, and asked:

"I say, Jim, I hopes you ain't sufferin' from de green-eyed monstrom; yer has puffec confersdence in yer wife, hasn't yer?"

"You bet I has puffec confersdence in Berlindy. She's all right, but I don't quite trust dat sainted pasture, Whangdoodle Baxter. He's de one I hasn't got no confersdence in."—Texas Siftings.

Hon. Frank Smith.

Hon. Frank Smith seems to have talent a for unpopularity. In addition to incurring the hostility of organized labor by characterizing the Knights of Labor as "a lot thieves," he has excited the antagonism of the temperance men. At the Prohibitory Alliance meeting on Wednesday evening, Rev. Mr. Keefer, the general agent of the Alliance stated that during the debate on the Scott Act amendments in the Senate, Toronto was disgraced by Hon. Frank Smith, who continually interrupted speakers on behalf of the measure, with such insulting remarks as, "he hasn't had a horn for a couple of hours," etc. The prohibitionists will not forget that Hon. Frank Smith, who thus insulted their friends in the Senate, is a member of Sir John Macdonald's administration.—Toronto News.

Important Information to the Trade.

We have received information from a reliable source that some of the wholesale dealers are endeavoring to injure our brands by representing "that they are not as good as they used to be." This is done for the sole purpose of foisting upon the retailer and the consumer, private and unknown brands, that pay them (the wholesalers) a large profit. It is a well-known and indisputable fact that for the past twenty-five years the reputation and the quality of the justly celebrated and popular brands, CABLE, EL PADRE, and others of our manufacture, have been and always will be maintained, the statements of interested parties to the contrary, notwithstanding. We respectfully beg to impress upon smokers the importance of their insisting upon having our reliable and well known brands, if they desire to avoid smoking cheap trashy cigars, when a little thoughtfulness would have obviated the annoyance and disappointment consequent upon taking whatever is handed to them. Retailers would do well to avoid the persuasive and oratorical jobber, that endeavors to impress upon them the importance of trying private and unknown brands in preference to the CABLE and EL PADRE that have outlived the thousand and 1 brands that have been introduced since the introduction of the CABLE and EL PADRE. Our (5c) CABLE is put up in two sizes, the CONCHA and IMPERIAL QUEEN cigar has a narrow red band, with the word CABLE on it. None other genuine. Our new brand MADRE E HIJO is exceptionally fine and well worth a trial. S. DAVIS & SONS. Factories, Montreal, Toronto branch, 34 Church street.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

Lady Hampton had recently become a widow. In her youth she had felt some little hope of being mistress of Darrell Court; but that hope had soon died. Now, however, that a niece was thrown upon her hands, she took heart of grace in another respect; for Sir Oswald was not an old man. It was true his hair was white, but he was erect, dignified, and, in Lady Hampton's opinion, more interesting than a handsome young man, who would think of nothing but himself. If he would be but sensible, and, instead of adopting that proud, unformed girl, marry, how much better it would be!

She knew that her niece was precisely the style that he admired—elegant, delicate, utterly incapable of any originality, ready at any moment to yield her opinions and ideas, ready to do implicitly as she was told, to believe in the superiority of her husband—a model woman, in short, after Sir Oswald's own heart. She saw that the baronet was much struck with Elinor; she knew that in his own mind he was contrasting the two girls—the graceful timidity of the one, her perfect polish of manner, with the brusque independence and terribly plain-spoken fashion of the other.

"It would be ten thousand pities," said Lady Hampton to herself, "to see that girl mistress of Darrell Court. She would make a good queen for the Sandwich Islands. Before I go, I must open Sir Oswald's eyes, and give him a few useful hints."

CHAPTER XII.

SIR OSWALD THINKS OF MARRIAGE.

Fortune favored Lady Hampton. Sir Oswald was so delighted with his visitors that he insisted upon their remaining for luncheon.

"The young ladies will have time to become friends," he said; but it was as well that he did not see how contemptuously Pauline turned away at the words. "Pauline," he continued, "Miss Rocheford will like to see the grounds. This is her first visit to Darrell Court. Show her the fountains and the flower-gardens."

Elinor looked up with a well-assumed expression of pleasure; Pauline's look of annoyance indicated that she obeyed greatly against her will.

Sir Oswald saw the captain looking wistfully after the two girlish figures.

"Go," he said, with a courtly smile. "Young people like to be together. I will entertain Lady Hampton."

Greatly relieved, the captain followed. He was so deeply and so desperately in love that he could not endure to see Pauline Darrell talking even to the girl by her side. He would fain have overheard every word, every glance of hers himself; he was madly jealous when such were bestowed upon others.

The three walked down the broad cedar path together, the captain all gallant attention, Miss Rocheford all sweetness, Pauline haughty as a young barbaric queen bound by a conqueror's chains. She did not like her companions, and did not make even a feint of being civil to them.

Meanwhile the opportunity so longed for by Lady Hampton had arrived; and the lady seized it with alacrity. She turned to Sir Oswald with a smile.

"You amuse me," she said, "by giving yourself such an air of age. Why do you consider yourself so old, Sir Oswald? If it were not that I feared to flatter you, I should say that there were few young men to compare with you."

"My dear Lady Hampton," returned the baronet, in a voice that was not without pathos, "look at this."

He placed his thin white hand upon his white hair. Lady Hampton laughed again.

"What does that matter! Why, many men are gray even in their youth. I have always wondered why you seek to appear so old, Sir Oswald. I feel sure, judging from many indications, that you cannot be sixty."

"No; but I am over fifty—and my idea is that, at fifty, one is really old."

"Nothing of the kind!" she said with great energy. "Some of the finest men I have known were only in the prime of life then. If you were seventy, you might think of speaking as you do. Sir Oswald," she asked, abruptly, looking keenly at his face, "why have you never married?"

He smiled, but a flush darkened the fine old face.

"I was in love once," he replied, simply, "and only once. The lady was young and fair. She loved me in return. But a few weeks before our marriage she was suddenly taken ill and died. I have never even thought of replacing her."

"How sad! What sort of a lady was she, Sir Oswald—this fair young love of yours?"

"Strange to say, in face, figure, and manner she somewhat resembled your lovely young niece, Lady Hampton. She had the same quiet, graceful manner, the same polished grace—so different from——"

"From Miss Darrell," supplied the lady, promptly. "How that unfortunate girl must jar upon you!"

"She does; but there are times when I have hopes of her. We are talking like old friends now, Lady Hampton. I may tell you that I think there is one and only one thing that can redeem my niece, and that is love. Love works wonders sometimes, and I have hopes that it may do so in her case. A grand master-passion such as controls the Darrells when they love at all—that would redeem her. It would soften that fierce pride and haughtiness, it would bring her to the ordinary level of womanhood; it would cure her of many of the fantastic ideas that seem to have taken possession of her; it would make her—what she certainly is not now—a gentlewoman."

"Do you think so?" queried Lady Hampton, doubtfully.

"I am sure of it. When I look at that grand face of hers, often so defiant, I think to myself that she may be redeemed by love."

"And if this grand master-passion does not come to her—if she cares for someone only after the ordinary fashion of women—what then?"

He threw up his hand with a gesture indicative of despair.

"Or," continued Lady Hampton—"pray pardon me for suggesting such a thing, Sir Oswald, but people of the world, like you and myself, know what odd things are likely at any time to happen—supposing that she should marry some commonplace lover, after a commonplace fashion, and that then the master-passion should find her out, what would be the fate of Darrell Court?"

"I cannot tell," replied Sir Oswald, despairingly.

"With a person, especially a young girl, of her self-willed, original, independent nature, one is never safe. How thankful I am that my niece is so sweet and so womanly!"

Sir Oswald sat for some little time in silence. He looked on this fair ancestral home of his, with its noble woods and magnificent gardens. What indeed would become of it if it fell into the ill-disciplined hands of an ill-disciplined girl—unless, indeed, she were subject to the control of a wise husband?

Would Pauline ever submit to such control? Her pale, grand face rose before him, the haughty lips, the proud, calm eyes—the man who mastered her, who brought her mind into subjection, would indeed be a superior being. For the first time a doubt crossed Sir Oswald's mind as to whether she would ever recognize the superior being in Captain Langton. He knew that there were depths in the girl's nature beyond his own reach. It was not all pride, all defiance—there were genius, poetry, originality, grandeur of intellect, and greatness of heart before which the baronet knew that he stood in hopeless, helpless awe.

Lady Hampton laid her hand on his arm.

"Do not despond, old friend," she said. "I understand you. I should feel like you. I should dread to leave the inheritance of my fathers in such dangerous hands. But, Sir Oswald, why despond? Why not marry?"

The baronet started.

"Marry!" he repeated. "Why, I have never thought of such a thing."

"Think of it now," counseled the lady, laughingly; "you will find the advice most excellent. Instead of tormenting yourself about an ill-conditioned girl, who delights in defying you, you can have an amiable, accomplished, elegant, and gentle wife to rule your household and attend to your comfort—you might have a son of your own to succeed you, and Darrell Court might yet remain in the hands of the Darrells."

"But, my dear Lady Hampton, where should I find such a wife? I am no longer young—who would marry me?"

"Any sensible girl in England. Take my advice, Sir Oswald. Let us have a Lady Darrell, and not an ill-trained girl who will delight in setting the world at defiance. Indeed, I consider that marriage is a duty which you owe to society and to your race."

"I have never thought of it. I have always considered myself as having, so to speak, finished with life."

"You have made a great mistake, but it is one that fortunately can be remedied."

Lady Hampton rose from her seat, and walked a few steps forward.

"I have put his thoughts in the right groove," she mused; "but I ought to say a word about Elinor."

She turned to him again.

"You ask me who would marry you. Why, Sir Oswald, in England there are hundreds of girls, well-bred, elegant, graceful, gentle, like my niece, who would ask nothing better from fortune than a husband like yourself."

She saw her words take effect. She had turned his thoughts and ideas in the right direction at last.

"Shall we go and look after our truants?" she asked, suavely.

And they walked together down the path where Pauline had so indignantly gathered the broken lily. As though unconsciously, Lady Hampton began to speak of her niece.

"I have adopted Elinor entirely," she said—"indeed there was no other course for me to pursue. Her mother was my youngest sister; she has been dead many years. Elinor has been living with her father, but he has just secured a government appointment abroad, and I asked him to give his daughter to me."

"It was very kind of you," observed Sir Oswald.

Creameries.

The farmers of Otonabee are anxious for the establishment of a creamery in that township. With a creamery, only the cream is sent to the factory.

Mr. D. Belleghem is full of push. He has pushed his premises as far to the front, and as far upward as practicable. Now he is pushing to the rear. County Court Term.

The following cases were disposed of at County Court term, before His Honor Judge Weller, Saturday morning:—

STICKEL VS. WHITE.—A motion by E. B. Stone for a new trial in Stickel vs. White, in which a verdict for the defendant was given at the last County Court sittings, was dismissed with costs. E. B. Stone for plaintiff, and D. W. Dumble for defendant.

HARTLEY VS. BEAVIS.—The argument in this case, an action brought by the plaintiff, Mrs. Hartley, a joint owner of a parcel of land, against Thomas Beavis, also a joint owner of the same land, to recover rents collected by the defendant, was concluded, having been held over from the last sittings of the County Court. Judgment for the plaintiff, $31.61, in addition to the sum of $56.95 paid into court. R. E. Wood for plaintiff and D. W. Dumble for the defendant.

St. Andrew's New Organ.

A Magnificent Instrument of Beautiful Tone and Fine Finish.

On Saturday afternoon, Mr. Edward Lye and Sons, of Toronto, finished their task of setting up the new and handsome pipe organ with which they have supplied St. Andrew church. The organ is in keeping with the beautiful finish of the pretty little church and is allowed by the musical luminaries who have seen and heard it, to be a very fine instrument. It presents a handsome front of twenty seven feet, four and a half feet of which on either side is extension. The instrument is cased in chestnut with walnut trimming. The front pipes are highly ornamental, in buff and maroon and gold ornamental illuminations. Four handsome buttresses separate the front pipes into three clusters of eleven each, the centre cluster being lower than the others, which is one of the latest styles in pipe organ building. The instrument is a two manual organ, with a full compass of fifty-eight notes and pedal compass of 30 notes. The keys overhang in the most approved style. The great organ is supplied with nine stops and the swell with eight, besides two stops on the pedals. The pedals number two to the great organ and two composition pedals. The instrument has sixteen feet double open diapason and bourdon in the pedal organ.

During the afternoon Mr. Lye, who is an accomplished musician, played a number of selections on the instrument, before an audience of several local musicians, showing to advantage the excellent qualities of the instrument.

Yesterday morning the instrument was used for the first time in supporting the singing during church service. Miss Hattie Johnston, organist of St. Andrew's, although she had no previous practice, succeeded admirably in manipulating the instrument. Those who heard the organ are delighted with its soft and sweet tones. It may be stated that the instrument has not been finally tuned, and also that Miss Johnston did not know that she would use the organ on Sunday, until a few minutes before the morning service.

It is proposed to formally open the organ on Monday evening next, with a grand recital by Dr. Davies, of Toronto, one of the finest organists in America.

Police Court.

At the police court this morning, William Miller, of town, was charged by Inspector Cochrane, with unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor at Bridgenorth, on June 17th.

The defendant did not appear, nor was he represented by counsel, and the case was proceeded with in his absence. Mr. R. E Wood appeared for the Crown. Three witnesses testified that on the date mentioned, they bought whiskey from the defendant.

The magistrate enlarged the case, till Thursday, to secure the presence of the defendant.

The case against R. N. Roddy was also enlarged till Thursday.

The British Elections.

LONDON, July 10.—The latest returns show 289 Tories, 63 Unionists, 149 Gladstonians, and 72 Parnellites. There remain 97 constituencies to be heard from, most off the elections coming off to-day.

Orange Demonstration.

A Meeting of Orangemen in Town Previous to Leaving for Belleville—A Respectable Assembly and Procession.

Early this morning the members of the local Orange lodges were busily engaged in preparing for their departure for Belleville, where they will take part in the monster Orange demonstration to be held in that city. The members of Peterborough L. O. L. No's. 49 and 80, and McWilliams Lodge of True Blues, assembled at the Orange Hall, about 7.30 a. m. and proceeded in a body to the Bethune street station, where they awaited the arrival of the brethren from Lakefield, Harvey, Nassau and Dummer. Shortly after eight the train arrived from the north carrying the above named Lodges, and the Fire Brigade band, which at an early hour went out to Lakefield to meet the brethren. The Lodges assembled, fell into line and in the following order, led by County Master J. B. McWilliams, mounted, marched to the Ashburnham station:—

County Master.
Fire Brigade Band.
District and County Past Masters.
District Masters.
McWilliams Lodge of True Blues.
Peterborough Lodge, No. 80.

Harvey Lodge, No. 453.
Dummer Lodge, No 281.
Warsaw Lodge, No. 284.
Peterborough Lodge, No. 49.
Nassau Lodge, No. 457.

In addition to the Orangmen, a large number of excursionist boarded the train of ten coaches, which were all well filled. George street and Hunter street, were lined with hundreds of spectators during the march of the procession, and even as early as seven o'clock there was a large crowd on the streets. The band and the Orangemen in their regalia looked very handsome, and no doubt will attract general attention at Belleville.

Police Court.

The Condon Case up Again—A Sunday Escapade Down the River.

The hearing of the charge against John Condon, enlarged from last week, was resumed at the police court this morning.

Mr. Edwards appeared for the prosecution and Mr. O'Meara for the defendants.

Mr. Leonard was sworn and testified that he drew up a lease for John Condon and John McFarlane, leasing Condon's bar to McFarlane. The lease was drawn subject to instructions from Condon and McFarlane, who came to his office. There was nothing said about avoiding the Scott Act.

To Mr. Edwards the witness stated that he understood the lease was for one month, and it was drawn accordingly. The lease was handed back to him signed only by Condon, after he had been served with a summons.

Mr. Edwards asked that as in this case it had been shown that there had been a great deal of drinking in Condon's house, and that an incomplete lease had been made out to shift any responsibility on to McFarlane, there should be a conviction. He said that the spirit of the law should be carried out as well as the letter.

Mr. O'Meara refrained from addressing the court on the ground that the case was clear enough.

The magistrate reserved judgment in this case until Friday, and also in the McFarlane case.

THE FAUCHER CASE.

Adolphe Faucher was arraigned before the court charged with unlawfully keeping liquor for sale between the 1st of May and the 6th of July.

Mr. Moore, who appeared for the defendant, pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Edwards appeared for the prosecution.

The evidence of seven witnesses showed that a party of a dozen or so of young men chartered Faucher's yacht, "Pearl," a week ago Sunday and took a trip down the river. They called at Faucher's hotel, where seven of the party took tea. Before tea they all drank lemonade, which was paid for. Several also had cigars and one or two went up to Mr. Faucher's private room, where they were treated to whiskey. This was not paid for but was given gratis. The witnesses stated that none of the party were intoxicated, although they had a barrel of beer on board the boat, and also a private flask. The beer was brought from the town. These liquors were not purchased from Faucher, who positively refused to sell any intoxicating liquor.

Adolphus Faucher, the defendant, was sworn and testified that he had chartered his boat to the witnesses for Sunday, a week ago. There was no arrangement for the party to call at his summer resort. The party called at his place for ice and wood. He treated two of the party to liquor from a bottle kept up stairs. This bottle belonged to Chamberlain, who had an interest in the business. He declined to answer whether he had brought to his place or sold at his place any intoxicating liquor since May 1st, on the ground that the answer might tend to criminate him. He did not sell any liquor, directly or indirectly, on the Sunday in question.

The magistrate reserved judgment till Friday next.

Female Slavery in New York.

The annual report of the labor commissioner of New York, recently issued, is an interesting document. The facts and figures it presents showing the condition of the working-women of the state, and especially those employed in trades in the metropolis, are decidedly suggestive, and reveal the existence of a pauper-labor problem at home of sufficient magnitude to demand the most careful study of our political economists and social reformers. It is not at all necessary for them to go abroad to find destitution and misery among the working classes; there is enough of it in New York to afford the fullest play to the most sympathetic nature.

According to the estimates of the labor commissioner, more than 200,000 females are engaged in the various trades in New York city. As a rule their work is hard and their wages low much lower than is paid to men for the same quality and quantity of work. There are some exceptions to this rule, but they are not numerous or important. In the printing, hat-making, and cigar-making trades the pay of the two sexes is on the same scale, but there are no other industries of any magnitude in which this is the case.

The commissioner's report shows that, as a general thing, where male and female labor is paid at the same rate the work is of a low order, and the compensation wretchedly small. For instance, women who are employed in the manufacture of cigars are mostly engaged in such work as stripping and binding, which commands the very lowest wages. But the most deplorable condition of affairs appears to exist in the clothing industry, which gives employment to more women than any other. Their work is hard, their pay beggarly, and the conditions by which they are surrounded are simply intolerable. They are obliged to compete not only with the great army of their own sex to whom needle and thread are the sole resources for keeping body and soul together, but with sewing-men, who get better wages for the same amount of work. The lot of the average sewing-woman in New York appears to be in no way preferable to that of the average African slave in the south thirty years ago. Her life is simply one continued round of toil, oppression, and misery, with scarcely a ray of sunshine to relieve its profound gloom. In the New York system of slavery the "middleman," or "sweater," takes the place filled by the overseer in the south under the old regime, and right faithfully, it appears, does he discharge the functions of his office. His mission is to oppress the sewing-girls and give to the world a practical demonstration of the fact that life can be sustained and daily tasks performed upon an incredibly small amount of nourishment. Under his skillful manipulation the price paid for making a dozen pairs of trousers has been brought down to $1.50, while for turning out a waistcoat complete the sewing-woman is paid the munificent sum of 15 cents. The women do this work at their own homes, thereby saving rent to the "sweater." It is estimated that one-quarter of their earnings is absorbed in rent; the cost of their sewing-machines is another heavy charge, and by an atrocious system of "fines" and "dockings" the miserable compensation allowed for their work is still further reduced.

The report of the labor commissioner gives the results of visits of inspection paid to a number of rookeries in which these unfortunate women are domiciled. On the attic floor of one tall tenement-house six women were found working with four sewing-machines in a room not more than ten feet square. It was filled with cloaks ready to be put together. They were elegant garments, retailing at from $35 to $75 each, and two of the women, working assiduously sixteen hours each, were just able to complete one of them. For this work they were paid $1, 50 cents each, or about 3 cents per hour. The atmosphere in which they labored was stifling, and all their surroundings of the most repulsive character. The labor commissioner declares that this was by no means an exceptional case, but says that similar sights are to be seen every day in hundreds of tenement-houses in New York. The want, misery, and degradation of these women are reported to be utterly beyond description—and almost beyond conception.—Chicago Times.

Old-Fashioned Journalism.

He was an old New Yorker, and he talked with the precision of the printed page, says the Turf, Field and Farm, from which we quote: "Would you believe it? When the Tribune was started, it refused to publish theatrical advertisements or to chronicle the movements of players. Now it gives much space to the stage. When Mr. Bonner was pushing the Ledger, he bought a page in the daily, semi-weekly, and weekly Tribune, agreeing to pay $3,000 for it. After the advertisement had appeared in the daily, Mr. Greeley raised the objection that it would hurt the weekly, which had a very large circulation, to allow one man to occupy so much space in it. Mr. Bonner insisted that the contract should be carried out in good faith, but Mr. Greeley was obstinate, and the matter was compromised by no charge being made for the page occupied in the daily.

"When Mr. Bennett, the founder of the Herald, heard of the transaction, he said to his trusted lieutenant, Joe Elliott, that the Tribune people were foolish; that no advertiser could ask for too much space at the regular rates in the Herald. Mr. Elliott repeated this conversation to Mr. Bonner, and the proprietor of the Ledger quickly remarked, 'Tell Mr. Bennett that I will take eight pages of his paper.' As the Herald was an eight page journal, the advertiser put in a bid for its entire space. Mr. Bennett was equal to the emergency. He put on sixteen pages, three pages of the Ledger advertisement going into one half section and five into the other half. This was the first time the Herald ever issued a sixteen page paper, and the feat was regarded as something wonderful. How different at the present, when more than thirty-two pages are sometimes caught and folded from the press! Sam Sinclair, the publisher of the Tribune, lived at that time in 26th Street, near Eighth Ave. The morning that the sixteen page Herald came out, he took his seat in the street car and bought a copy of Mr. Bennett's paper. When he opened the first half, and saw three of the pages monopolized by the Ledger, a scowl came on his face, and he tossed the sheet over his shoulder through the open window. Mr. Bonner, who had got into the same car, one block higher up, was amused by Sinclair's act, and he called out: 'You have thrown away the lesser part; you will find the greater in what you have kept.' Mr. Sinclair colored to the roots of his hair, and opened the sheet and was greatly surprised to see that five of the pages were given up to the Ledger.

"The fact then dawned on him that he and Greeley had made a mistake in refusing to carry out the contract with Mr. Bonner for one page in the Tribune. The first Sunday Herald was issued to get rid of the left-over matter which encumbered the galleys. It was an experiment; but it brought such good results as to lead to the establishment of a regular Sunday edition of the paper. Mr. Bennett was quick to seize a point and profit by it. Now all the morning journals, including the Tribune, print a Sunday issue, and it is really the elaborate and most costly paper of the week. The changes in the newspaper world are marvelous to an old-timer like myself." A far-away look came into the eyes of the speaker as he uttered the last words, as if the faces of the elder Bennett, Horace Greeley, Henry J. Raymond, and other journalistic stars rose before him from the mists of the past. Then he muttered something about time moving on with remorseless tread, indifferent to change, and thrust his hands into his pockets and walked away.

Crushed by a Car Wheel.

Wm. Matthews Gets His Foot Crushed in Attempting to Board a Train in Motion—Narrow Escapes.

As the train which carried the Forester's excursion to Toronto, this morning, was crossing Hunter street, Mr. Wm. Matthews, of Ashburnham, attempted to board the train, and in so doing had a narrow escape from being thrown under the car wheels. As it was, his left foot was caught by the wheels and badly crushed. Matthews who had an excursion ticket for Toronto, found himself late, and not wishing to get left behind, he made a run for the train. It was going at the usual rate through town. He did not wait for the rear coach, but grasped the hand rod leading up the steps on one of the middle coaches. The motion of the train was greater than he anticipated and he was thrown with considerable force almost under the cars. The wheels of one truck passed over the outside of his left foot, crushing about half of the heel, along the side of the foot and the two lesser toes. His boot saved the foot to some extent. Matthews scrambled out from his perilous position, when Mr. H. Grundy, who was a witness of the accident, went to Matthews' assistance. He hailed a young lady who chanced to come along with a phaeton, who kindly drove the sufferer to Dr. Kincaid's office. Dr. Fife assisted Dr. Kincaid in dressing the injured member. It was found that the flesh of the heel, a number of the small bones of the foot and of the two toes were badly crushed. The doctor has hopes that the foot can be saved. Mr. Matthews was taken home this morning.

ALMOST ACCIDENTS.

As the Foresters' excursion train left the station, a little girl, who probably had a ticket for the city, endeavored to get on the train while in motion. She ran along the platform and even along the track past the tank house. Fortunately she was was unsuccessful in her attempts to grasp the iron railing guarding the steps. It is probable that if she had succeeded in catching hold of the rod she would have been thrown around under an engine which followed immediately at the rear of the car.

A few yards farther on, as the train was crossing Charlotte street, Mr. James McGill made an attempt to board the train, and was thrown on his shoulders, and almost spun round like a top. He succeeded in grasping the stair rod, but was unable to retain his grip, owing to the speed at which the train was going. McGill, after finding his feet, made an attempt to catch the train, but was also unsuccessful in this.

Important Information to the Trade.

We have received information from a reliable source that some of the wholesale dealers are endeavoring to injure our brands by representing "that they are not as good as they used to be." This is done for the sole purpose of foisting upon the retailer and the consumer, private and unknown brands, that pay them (the wholesalers) a large profit. It is a well-known and indisputable fact that for the past twenty-five years the reputation and the quality of the justly celebrated and popular brands, CABLE, EL PADRE, and others of our manufacture, have been and always will be maintained, the statements of interested parties to the contrary, notwithstanding. We respectfully beg to impress upon smokers the importance of their insisting upon having our reliable and well known brands, if they desire to avoid smoking cheap trashy cigars, when a little thoughtfulness would have obviated the annoyance and disappointment consequent upon taking whatever is handed to them. Retailers would do well to avoid the persuasive and oratorical jobber, that endeavors to impress upon them the importance of trying private and unknown brands in preference to the CABLE and EL PADRE that have outlived the thousand and [illegible] brands that have been introduced since the introduction of the CABLE and EL PADRE. Our (5c) CABLE is put up in two sizes, the COLONIA and IMPERIAL QUEEN cigar has a narrow red band, with the word CABLE on it. Many others genuine. Our new brand MADAM E. HAND is exceptionally fine and well worth a trial. S. DAVIS & SONS. Factories, Montreal, Toronto branch, 34 Church street.

The Poets and Poetry of Canada.

[No. 27.]

Charles Stewart.

"The world is full of poetry;—the air
Is living with its spirit; and the waves
Dance to the music of its melodies,
And sparkle in its brightness."

PERCIVAL—Poetry.

The subject of this sketch was born at Baillieston, near the city of Glasgow. He belongs to much the same stage of life as did Burns and Hogg, although not exactly, for while the one was a ploughman and the other a shepherd, Mr. Stewart was a weaver, as was his father before him. His father was a very active and energetic man and a leader among his countrymen of the same social grade. He was particularly interested in everything which tended to elevate the position of the working man.

Charles Stewart was very delicate and of a weak constitution when a child, but through the careful solicitude and tender nursing of an affectionate and watchful mother, he outgrew the usual attacks of childhood and became stronger year by year. His schooling was very limited, indeed, and that little was received between the ages of seven and nine. Life was considered too serious and important a business to allow boys and girls to fritter away their time on books or learning, when they could earn money to feed and clothe themselves by hard toil. So the poor people who lived by weaving considered, and stern necessity drove them to compel even young children to engage in severe manual labor. Weaving was miserably paid and the father of a family of six or seven, found it impossible to keep the wolf from the door by his own individual exertions, however severe.

The children were consequently put to work at a very early age. Young Stewart had two miles to travel to and from school and his task of yarn to wind in after hours. The poetic muse, with which nature soothed his pathway, still found vent however, and at an early age he began to write verses. His natural diffidence prevented him from offering his productions for publication and for years nothing which fell from his pen was even printed. His first article appeared in the Northern Star, when he was about 27 years of age. A story is told of a companion going to town with Stewart to offer this precious article to the publisher. On their way home, his companion asked Stewart what he said and it was then discovered that the poetry still lay in Stewart's pocket! Whereupon his companion encouraged him to tramp back again and deposit it at the office, and this was accordingly done with the above result.

For fourteen years young Stewart plied the profession of a weaver, until at last finding, that by all his efforts, he only succeeded in keeping body and soul together, he threw up his loom and took a short journey to Boatbridge, in the hope of finding some more remunerative employment. His quest was successful and he began life, as it were, anew at the iron works, where he was appointed to assist the engineers as a common day laborer. Very shortly he acquired some knowledge of the structure and movements of the steam engine and this inspired him with the hope of being able to gain a higher position in life and to elevate himself somewhat in the world. To crown his happy anticipations, Stewart married and succeeded in securing a humble abode of his own.

He then apprenticed himself to the trade of boiler making and served his three years faithfully, only to discover at the end of the term, that he could never like the business. Nothing daunted he again turned to another sphere and knowing how to take care of and run a steam engine, offered himself in this capacity at the nearest coal works. He secured employment at once and began work. But alas! his very first hours proved most unfortunate. His turn came on at night, it was Egyptian darkness, the locality was strange to him, and our unlucky engine driver stepped over a stairway in the darkness and fell about ten feet, dislocating and fracturing his right elbow.

Through surgical bungling and mismanagement, after months of torture, his arm still remained dislocated and consequently useless. His value, therefore, in the labour market became greatly depreciated, but through the kindness of his employers, he was again taken on as soon as he recovered sufficiently to do anything. And it speaks nobly of such a man, that although his right arm was, and is, almost useless, he fulfilled his duties as engine-keeper to the satisfaction of his employers, and remained faithful at his post for fourteen years.

In 1866 he came to Canada, and was employed as engine-driver at the Galt woollen factory. He was appointed librarian of the Mechanics' Institute there in 1872, which position he still holds. He is a regular and constant contributor to the Scottish-American Journal and other papers, some of his effusions receiving high praise from the Toronto Globe, generally a good authority on literary matters. A short time ago Mr. Stewart was prevailed upon to publish a small volume of his poems under the title of "The Harp of Strathnaver." It has been very well received and contains ample proof that Mr. Stewart is a good specimen of a self-made man, and that he has received from Dame Nature a good store of humor, pathos, and good nature.

The Scottish-American Journal thus writes of his literary venture:—

"The 'Harp of Strathnaver' is a lay of Scottish Highland Evictions, by Charles Stewart, of Galt, Ont., with a number of short poems appended. This lay is a happy conception, and is well wrought out to portray the hardships attendant upon the original Highland evictions. To carry out the object, the author in a dramatical way introduces five persons, and in their soliloquies and dialogues they well depict the happy Crofter home which Callum left, the desolation he found on his return, and the natural, deep-rooted antipathy which independent, sturdy Highland-men entertain towards all parochial aid, in whatever form. Notwithstanding several minor blemishes (which we presume have crept in chiefly from careless proofreading), the lay has many beautiful passages, and numerous sentiments worthy of commendation.

"It cannot fail to be deeply interesting to all who feel for the Highland Crofters in their present struggles against adversity and privation. At the same time we consider several of the minors poems appended are of superior merit as literary productions.

Battle of the Boyne,

At the City of the Bay—Immense Congregation of Orangemen at Belleville—The City Inundated With Visitors—A Monster Procession.

The 12th of July was grandly celebrated in Belleville yesterday. At an early hour all the leading thoroughfares to the city were thronged with people, and during the morning no less than six excursion trains and boats from outside places added their quota, till at ten o'clock the streets were almost impassable. The city was gaily decorated in honor of the occasion. The lodges, as they arrived, proceeded to the Agricultural Grounds, where the procession formed and marched through the principal streets of the city and finally to the Agricultural Hall.

THE PROCESSION

contained the various grand officers of the Young Britons and True Blues, and the Orange lodges of Hastings, North and South, Prince Edward, Northumberland, Lennox and Addington, East Durham, West Peterborough, representatives from other court lodges, the Grand Master and officers of the Provincial and Grand Black Chapter of Black Knights of Ireland, Past Grand and Provincial Grand Masters and officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge.

The following is the order of the lodges of West Peterborough:

Marshall (mounted), J. B. McWilliams.

The West Peterborough lodges were assigned the post of honor in the procession, an honor, to which their creditable appearance, fine marching, and general deportment fully entitled them. It was noticeable that Nassau Lodge was the best and finest appearing body among the best, their stalwart stature, soldierly bearing and neat appearance, making them the object of general regard, and many were the words of praise and shouts of approval that greeted their passage over the route of the procession.

South Monaghan.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Now, that the season is so far advanced, perhaps, a brief report of the condition of the crops may be interesting. Haying, may be said to be finished and has been secured in splendid order, with the exception of the first cut which was damaged to some extent. The crop is very variable, some very good, and others, very light; the yield will not exceed eighty per cent. of an average crop.

Fall wheat is the only crop that promises a full average; it is rapidly maturing, some portion being fit for harvesting. Spring wheat gives promise of a very light crop; barley is quite extensively sown, but present indications are that it will not be more than from 75 to 85 per cent. of an average crop. Oats are short, and a light crop; peas, in a number of instances, promised well, but just now the bulk of the crop is in bloom; the drouth has affected them very much. Perhaps no other crop, is so affected by drought as peas at this stage, and, if the present dry weather continues, the later fields will scarcely pay for harvesting and threshing, only for the straw. Roots promise fair but it is early to give an opinion of what they may yet be.

The fruit crop, on the whole is very light. Apples, pears, plums, almost nil, a large number of trees having died. Cherries are a slim crop, probably little more than will supply the farm consumption. Gooseberries and currants are a fair average crop, and purchasers will have to be on the alert, as this is the only small fruit crop this season. Raspberries very scarce.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

"Nay, the kindness is on her part, not on mine. She is like a sunbeam in my house. Fair, gentle, a perfect lady, she has not an idea that is not in itself innately refined and delicate. I knew that if she went into society at all she would soon marry."

"Is there any probability of that?" asked Sir Oswald.

"No, for by her own desire we shall live very quietly this year. She wished to see Darrell Court and its owner—we have spoken so much of you—but with that exception we shall go nowhere."

"I hope she is pleased with Darrell Court," said Sir Oswald.

"How could she fail to be, as well as delighted with its hospitable master? I could read that much in her pretty face. Here they are, Sir Oswald—Miss Darrell alone, looking very dignified—Elinor, with your friend. Ah, she knows how to choose friends!"

They joined the group, but Miss Darrell was in one of her most dignified moods. She had been forced to listen to a fashionable conversation between Captain Langton and Miss Rocheford, and her indignation and contempt had got the better of her politeness.

They all partook of luncheon together, and then the visitors departed; not, however, until Lady Hampton had accepted from Sir Oswald an invitation to spend a week at Darrell Court. Sir Francis and Lady Allroy were coming—the party would be a very pleasant one; and Sir Oswald said he would give a grand ball in the course of the week—a piece of intelligence which delighted the captain and Miss Rocheford greatly.

Then Lady Hampton and her niece set out. Sir Oswald held Elinor's hand rather longer than etiquette required.

"How like she is to my dead love!" he thought, and his adieu was more than cordial.

As they drove home, Lady Hampton gazed at her niece with a look of triumph.

"You have a splendid chance, Elinor," she said; "no girl ever had a better. What do you think of Darrell Court?"

"It is a palace, aunt—a magnificent, stately palace. I have never seen anything like it before."

"It may be yours if you play your cards well, my dear."

"How?" cried the girl. "I thought it was to be Miss Darrell's. Every one says she is her uncle's heiress."

"People need not make too sure of it. I do not think so. With a little management, Sir Oswald will propose to you, I am convinced."

The girl's face fell.

"But, aunt, he is so old."

"He is only just fifty, Elinor. No girl in her senses would ever call that old. It is just the prime of life."

"I like Captain Langton so much the better," she murmured.

"I have no doubt that you do, my dear; but there must be no nonsense about liking or disliking. Sir Oswald's income must be quite twenty thousand per annum, and if you manage well, all that may be yours. But you must place yourself under my directions, and do implicitly as I tell you, if so desirable a result is to be achieved."

CHAPTER XIII.

PAULINE'S LOVE FOR DARRELL COURT.

Miss Darrell preserved a dignified silence during dinner; but when the servants had withdrawn, Sir Oswald, who had been charmed with his visitors, said:

"I am delighted, Pauline, that you have secured a young lady friend. You will be pleased with Miss Rocheford."

Pauline made no reply; and Sir Oswald, never thinking that it was possible for one so gentle and lovely as Miss Rocheford to meet with anything but the warmest praise, continued:

"I consider that Lady Hampton has done us all a great favor in bringing her charming niece with her. Were you not delighted with her, Pauline?"

Miss Darrell made no haste to reply; but Sir Oswald evidently awaited an answer.

"I do not like Miss Rocheford," she said at length; "it would be quite useless to pretend that I do."

Miss Hastings looked up in alarm. Captain Langton leaned back in the chair, with a smile on his lips—he always enjoyed Pauline's "scenes" when her anger was directed against any one but himself; Sir Oswald's brow darkened.

"Pray, Miss Darrell, may I ask why you do not like her?"

"Certainly. I do not like her for the same reason that I should not like a diet of sugar. Miss Rocheford is very elegant and gentle, but she has no opinions of her own; every wind sways her; she has no ideas, no force of character. It is not possible for me to really like such a person."

"But, my dear Pauline," interposed Miss Hastings, "you should not express such very decided opinions; you should be more reticent, more tolerant."

"If I am not to give my opinion," said Pauline, serenely, "I should not be asked for it."

"Pray, Miss Hastings, do not check such delightful frankness," cried Sir Oswald, angrily, his hands trembling, his face darkening with an angry frown.

He said no more; but the captain, who thought he saw a chance of recommending himself to Miss Darrell's favor, observed, later on in the evening:

"I knew you would not like our visitor, Miss Darrell. She was not of the kind to attract you."

"Sir Oswald forced my opinion from me," she said; "but I shall not listen to one word of disparagement of Miss Rocheford from you, Captain Langton. You gave her great attention, you flattered her, you paid her many compliments; and now, if you say that you dislike her, it will simply be deceitful, and I abominate deceit."

It was plain that Pauline had greatly annoyed Sir Oswald. He liked Miss Rocheford very much; the sweet, yielding, gentle disposition, which Pauline had thought so monotonous, delighted him. Miss Rocheford was so like that lost dead love of his—so like! And for this girl, who tried his patience every hour in the day, to find fault with her! It was too irritating; he could not endure it. He was very cold and distant to Pauline for some time, but the young girl was serenely unconscious of it.

In one respect she was changing rapidly. The time had been when she had been indifferent to Darrell Court, when she had thought with regret of the free, happy life in the Rue d'Orme, where she could speak lightly of the antiquity and grandeurs of the race from which she had sprung; but all that was altered now. It could not be otherwise, considering how romantic, how poetical, how impressionable she was, how keenly alive to everything beautiful and noble. She was living here in the very cradle of the race, where every tree had its legend, every stone its story; how could she be indifferent while the annals of her house were filled with noble retrospects? The Darrells had numbered great warriors and statesmen among their number. Some of the noblest women in England had been Darrells; and Pauline had learned to glory in the old stories, and to feel her heart beat with pride as she remembered that she, too, was a Darrell.

So, likewise, she had grown to love the Court for its picturesque beauty, its stately magnificence, and the time came soon when almost every tree and shrub was dear to her.

It was Pauline's nature to love deeply and passionately if she loved at all; there was no lukewarmness about her. She was incapable of those gentle, womanly likings that save all wear and tear of passion. She could not love in moderation; and very soon the love of Darrell Court became a passion with her. She sketched the mansion from twenty different points of view, she wrote verses about it; she lavished upon it the love which some girls lavish upon parents, brothers, sisters, and friends.

She stood one day looking at it as the western sunbeams lighted it up until it looked as though it were bathed in gold. The stately towers and turrets, the flower-wreathed balconies, the grand arched windows, the Gothic porch, all made up a magnificent picture; the fountains were playing in the sunlit air, the birds singing in the stately trees. She turned to Miss Hastings, and the governess saw tears standing warm and bright in the girl's eyes.

"How beautiful it is!" she said. "I cannot tell you—I have no words to tell you—how I love my home."

The heart of the gentle lady contracted with sudden fear.

"It is very beautiful," she said; "but, Pauline, do not love it too much; remember how very uncertain everything is."

"There can be nothing uncertain about my inheritance," returned the girl. "I am a Darrell—the only Darrell left to inherit it. And, oh! Miss Hastings, how I love it! But it is not for its wealth that I love it; it is my heart that is bound to it. I love it as I can fancy a husband loves a wife, a mother her child. It is everything to me."

"Still," said Miss Hastings, "I would not love it too well; everything is so uncertain."

"But not that," replied Pauline, quickly. "My uncle would never dare to be so unjust as to leave Darrell Court to any one but a Darrell. I am not in the least afraid—not in the least."

CHAPTER XIV.

BREACH BETWEEN UNCLE AND NIECE.

A few days later the tranquility of Darrell Court was at an end. The invited guests were expected, and Sir Oswald had determined to do them all honor. The state-apartments, which had not been used during his tenure, were all thrown open; the superb ballroom, once the pride of the county, was re-decorated; the long, empty corridors and suites of apartments reserved for visitors, were once more full of life. Miss Hastings was the presiding genius; Pauline Darrell took far less interest in the preparations.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pay them a larger profit, the consumer being the loser thereby.

Mr. W. H. Daniel Beard's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Daniel Beard, of Belleville, scalded to death in the railway accident, at Omemee, took place at Belleville, on Sunday afternoon, under the auspices of Oxford Lodge, Sons of England, of which deceased was a member. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Locomotive Firemen, also attended in a body.

Sunday School Excursion.

The Charlotte Street Methodist Sunday School excursion and pic-nic will be held Wednesday, 14th inst., in the beautiful grove at Strickland's Point, Lakefield. The train will leave Peterborough at 8.30 a.m.. The steamer Cruiser will take excursionists on the arrival of the train, to the Point, also will run continuous trips up the lakes during the day. Tickets, adults 40c., children 25c., on sale at R. Neil's boot and shoe store.

Costly, and Must be Carefully Kept.

Our æsthetic councillors are bound to have everything, that concerns their personal comfort and convenience in apple-pie order about the new town buildings. Belleghem has the contract of supplying thirteen wardrobes, for the dressing room, one for each member, provided with the best locks and keys. It is said that several members secured one of Gough's linen dusters and they will not risk having them injured, so the costly garments are to be kept under lock and key

A Smash.

The Fenelon Falls Gazette says: "Last Tuesday, Mr. Ostrom, of Peterborough, was at the railway station here with some eggs. The eggs are all placed separately in little cardboard compartments, which prevents them from breaking under any ordinary circumstances. Still they won't stand everything, and when one of Mr. Ostrom's cases, while being lifted on to the floor of a car, slipped and fell, there was an awful smash, no less than 260 of the eggs being broken by "stopping so suddenly."

Army Horses

Who can now deny the power of the press? A few days ago the EXAMINER called attention to the fact that the Dominion Government had neglected to place Peterborough on the list of places at which the Imperial officers would purchase horses for the British Army. This overnight has been attended to, and as will be seen by advertisement in another column, the officers of Her Majesty's Imperial Government will be in Peterborough on July 22nd. The advertisement is worthy the attention of farmers and other horse-owners.

Honoured in His Exit

As previously intimated, in the EXAMINER that he would do, Mr. J. H. Paterson, left for Toronto, on Monday morning, to take a responsible position in the wholesale house of Wild, Brock & Company. On Saturday the employees of the Golden Lion waited upon Mr. Paterson and presented him with a complimentary address and an elegant dressing case, as a token of the high position he held in their esteem. Mr. Paterson is a worthy recipient of such a testimonial. His urbanity, good fellowship and obliging disposition made him a great favorite with his associates. The EXAMINER joins the many friends of Mr. Paterson, in wishing him unbounded success in his new sphere, and predicts that in his new home he will win as many and as fast friends as he did in Peterborough.

For all kinds of fine fruit—call at Ostrom's, George street.

For the Back Lakes.

Mr. D. Breese and family, Mr. Alfred Thomas and wife, Mr. Chas. McLelland, and several members of Mr. John McLelland's family, and a number of friends from Newcastle and Toronto, left town yesterday for Lakefield, en route to the back lakes, for a two weeks' camp.

An Escapade.

A dry goods clerk and a youthful driver of a delivery waggon, yesterday afternoon, while delivering parcels in the north end of the town, succeeded in having a short runaway. The dry goods man was thrown out, but the driver managed to hold his seat and the horse after a long run. Shoe laces held the harness together till the boys reached home.

Hurrah for Peterborough.

Under the above heading the following appears in the Port Perry Observer: A grand excursion to Peterborough and return is now on the tapis under the auspices of Warriner Lodge I. O. O. F. and of Lodge Old England, S. of E.—Our Oddfellows and Sons of England can always be trusted in getting up a first-class enjoyable time and parties who have gone with them once are always glad of an opportunity of getting with them again. Particulars will be furnished in time.

A Risky Ride.

A member of Lakefield Orange Lodge, who had difficulty in finding a seat in a car to carry him home from here, crawled under the car, clambered into the stay rod which runs almost the entire length of the car, and held on like a sloth till he reached Lakefield, a ride of about nine miles. He was about to release his hold when the train stopped. The fore end brakeman noticed the perch the passenger had travelled on, and quickly assisted him from under the car.

Sunday School Excursion.

The best and most enjoyable of the season will be the excursion of the Charlotte street Methodist Sunday School to Strickland's grove, Lakefield, to-morrow. Yesterday Mr. Neil visited the grounds and completed arrangements for the perfect enjoyment of excursionists. The beautiful grove is in perfect order, swings are erected, and facilities for races, games, sports, etc. There is an abundant supply of boats, skiffs, etc., for those desiring to enjoy aquatic amusements. Every arrangement is completed and a great day of enjoyment is ahead for those who are at the Midland station to-morrow morning at 8.30 o'clock, when the excursion train starts for Lakefield, where it will be met by the steamer Cruiser which will carry excursionists to the grove. The steamer will run trips from village to grove during the day. Tickets 40 cents, children 25 cents. Don't neglect to go on this delightful excursion.

Shop Cash Railway.

Mr. J. C. Turnbull has placed in his shop for trial one track of Hazzard's Electric Cash Railway. Over the counter a standard is fastened to the ceiling. From the free end of this is tightly stretched a wire, terminating in the lower end of a similar standard over the cash desk. On this wire is hung, suspended under two wheels, a little cash box. Into this the salesman puts the bill of a purchase, made by a customer, and the cash. By simply pulling a handle, like a bell rope, a spring is brought into action and the cash box, with its contents, is shot swiftly and securely to the cash desk, where the bill is checked and the change, if any, returned in the same manner. This saves time and the bustle and confusion arising from a cash boy rushing from all parts of the shop to the cash desk. There is no danger of the little cash car stumbling over a baby cab, knocking over a baby or stepping on a small dog. If the trial trip proves satisfactory, Mr. Turnbull will have other tracks put in.

A Syndicate Summer Home.

A syndicate, composed of Judge Weller, Dr. Boucher, Messrs. R. E. Wood, J. E. Belcher, H. A. Hammond, G. W. Hatton and J. K. Hammond, have purchased the beautiful property known as "The Oaklands," situated on the shore of Pigeon Lake, Harvey township. This beautiful estate, which recently was the property of Mr. A. H. Martin, contains 85 acres. Upon it is situated a fine two-story residence, containing fifteen rooms. Attached are stables, coach house, bathing house, boat house, dancing pavilion, sheds, and ice house, and all appurtenances necessary to make it, with the delightful scenery of wooded shore and crystal water, an exceedingly pleasant summer residence. The syndicate will furnish in first class style the sitting room, dining room, kitchen and servants' bed rooms at the common expense, while, of the remaining rooms, one each is assigned to a member of the syndicate, who will furnish his apartment according to his taste. Possession is taken at once and the necessary repairs and furnishing necessary to make the summer home habitable this season, will be begun at once.

Messrs. Salisbury Bros. have received No. 23 of "Cassell's National Library"—Shakspere's Hamlet. 200 pages in fine clean type, only ten cents.

The Foresters' Excursion.

The long-talked-of excursion to Toronto, under the auspices of the local lodge of Foresters, left town this morning. It was well patronized, seven well filled coaches of excursionists leaving the station, pulled by one engine and propelled by another. The Fire Brigade Band accompanied the excursion. No doubt those who have availed themselves of the excursion will spend a pleasant and profitable holiday.

The McCarthy Act Muddle.

The following "notice" has been issued by the Department of Inland Revenue, and postmasters are directed to post it:—

"LIQUOR LICENSE ACT, 1883."

REFUND of the fees paid under this Act will be made by the Collector of Inland Revenue, Mr. John J. Hall, of Peterborough.

Persons applying for Refunds must present to the Collector the receipts which were taken from the Inspector when the fees were paid, or the Licenses which were granted by the License Board.

PAUL M. ROBINS,
Acting Commissioner.

Department of Inland Revenue, Ottawa, 30th June, 1886.

All this fuss, trouble and confusion were brought about by Sir John Macdonald attempting to encroach on Provincial rights and show "that little tyrant, etc." It was a piece of pure malice on Sir John's part combined with ignorance of constitutional law, to force an inferior License Act upon the country and to displace a good workable act. We all know how the Privy Council knocked the great constitutional lawyer's act into a cocked hat, and the above circular is the bill of the closing farce of the play. Hotel men will appreciate the annoyance and trouble they have been put to, in compliance with a bogus liquor act, while the electors will make a note of the enormous expense the country has been put to to pay bogus inspectors and license officials, all for the sake of Sir John's pig-headed persistence in legislating, where his legal knowledge, if it is "worth the paper it is written on," should have told him he had no right to take the first step.

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 25th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, I had given my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, two spermatic trusses made in New York, costing me $40. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down. It holds me perfectly secured under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. D. KING.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child ever; and 95 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. St. Thomas, June 26, 1886.

THE JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and as I am now able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat.

Yours truly,

A few Mantles and Lines of Millinery have also been Selected and marked down to clear out at similar Reduced Prices.

THE CAUSE OF ALL THIS.

It will interest the Ladies to know that our principal reason for making such a Sacrifice at this season of the year in the above lines, is in order to prepare our shelves for the arrival of a large purchase of Midsummer Goods. These will be had in a short time, but in the meantime we propose keeping up the demand which seems to exist at present for lines of Cheap Goods. As we said before, our CHEAP GOODS will be NEW. Remember that.

WEATHER NOTES.

June in all its beauty with flowery dells, fields once more covered with the seeds of man; with animal and insect life in full force and verdure has again bid us good-bye, till time, in its never ceasing revolution, bring it once more around in all its loveliness. How many now seeing its departure will never see its return, is impossible for us to comprehend. During the beginning of the month the temperature was of a medium nature, but on the 12th a change took place followed by a few days of very hot weather. At 2 p. m. on the 13th, the thermometer stood at 89° in the shade, on the 14th at 91°; on the 15th at 91°; on the 16th at 91°, when it again returned to its more comfortable state, the average temperature of the month being 59 19-30°. Rain fell on 12 days to the depth of 3 inches, being slightly above the June average; thunder on 5 days, one severe storm on the 25th the lightning doing considerable damage throughout the country; white frost on the mornings of the 4th and 13th and fog on one morning. Clover first in bloom on the 6th, timothy headed out on the 14th and other crops in their turn showing their welcome appearance. The following are the different points from which the wind was blowing at sunrise during the month, namely: South-west 8 days, west 4 days, north-west 4 days, north 2 days, east 6 days, south-east 1 day, and south 5 days.

On Thursday, the 8th inst., His Honor Judge Weller held a court in our Town Hall for the finale revision of our voters' list. Nine Reformers and one Conservative were added. Three Reformers struck from the list and two applicants rejected with some changes regarding description of lots etc. Three Conservatives were added at the preliminary court so it leaves us much the same numerically as our original list. G. W. Hatton attended on behalf of the Conservatives, and W. A. Stratton on behalf of the Reformers. Every one was fully satisfied with the just and fair proceedings of the court

Keene.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Pic-nics, excursions, sailing and fishing parties, and all sorts of summer solaces (?) together with the musical and cannibal mosquito, abound within our borders.

The Orange excursion to Belleville on the twelfth was largely patronized by our citizens and citizenesses. All arrived safely at home about ten or eleven p.m., dusty, delighted, and thoroughly tired out.

The Union Sunday School pic-nic, so long talked of, is to take place on Friday next, the 16th. All are to be at the wharf at Keene bridge at 8 a.m., sharp, so as to get a good start. The "Beaver" and barge are to carry the happy crowd wherever they shall be directed by the powers that be. Perhaps to Gore's Landing—perhaps somewhere else. Rice Lake is full of choice resorts.

A little daughter of Mr. Thos. Blake, of the 4th line of Otonabee, aged eleven years, broke her collar bone on Friday last, by falling from a height while climbing. She is doing very well so far.

The wife of Mr. Thompson McDonald (nee Annie Shortt) has recovered from the scarlet fever, though still quite weak. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald occupy the farm lately the home of Mr. Geo. Howson, south of Matthew's Corners.

Rev. Mr. Hughes and Mrs. Hughes of Colborne, are visiting with Mrs. Massie, who is their niece.

Mr. Graham, a former teacher here, is visiting at Mr. Wm. Campbell's.

Keene appears almost full of strangers and visitors.

The much needed rain has come and all rejoice. The hay throughout the township has all been saved; such a haying season has not been known for years. 'Rah for the Scott Act.

Not So Very Green.

"Boys, it isn't always safe to gamble on the greenness of country chaps," remarked a drummer in the smoking car; "only last week I was in a little town down in Missouri, and the bar-room of the hotel was full of the gawks of the town. I worked several smart little snaps for drinks that would not have caught a single sucker in a city, and had begun to think myself in luck. After awhile I heard a couple of fellows disputing about something and I asked them what the row was about.

"'Jim, here,' says one, 'declares he kin go out and pace off a quarter of a mile an' come in two feet of the actual measurement. He's a braggin', and kin never do it, stranger. I've just bet him $5 he can't; will you hold the stakes?'

"'I'd a good deal rather put up $25 against him,' says I; 'there's no man living can pace off so correctly as that.'

"'I go you the $25,' says the fellow they called Jim, promptly pulling out his money, and of course I couldn't back out. So the $50 was staked with the landlord and we went out to see him pace. We hunted around and found a twenty-foot pole, and Jim went into the middle of the street in front of the hotel and asked me which way he should go. I told him I didn't care, and after we had marked the spot he started of pacing very deliberately and with much caution. We followed him up with the pole, measuring after him. Pretty soon he stopped, stood still and waited for us, calling out that that was his quarter-mile limit. In a few minutes we had measured up to him, and what do you suppose the distance was? Thirteen hundred and twenty feet to an inch—exactly a quarter of a mile. I had lost as clear as a whistle, and I thought it the most wonderful feat I had ever witnessed. Before leaving town, however, I discovered how the thing was done. Jim was able to pace that quarter of a mile to an inch because he had carefully measured it off with the same pole we had used, and marked the two ends in a way known only to himself. More than that, he had measured from a certain spot in front of the hotel in three directions, and was thus prepared to go any way his victim might select. The fellow who bet the $5 with him was a roper-in, and I wasn't the first man they had made a sucker of, by a long shot. I'll have revenge on that town if I have to start up a skin faro layout or a drug store there, you see if I don't."—Wellman, in Chicago Herald.

Completely Crushed.

A Frankfort gentleman was called to Washington on business that kept him there for a week or two, during which he stopped at one of the best hotels and mingled in the best society. His friends observed on his return a marked change in his bearing, the greater particularity in his dress, the higher polish of his silk hat and boots, and other evidences of his better keep while on his visit to the capital city. A change was also noticed by his family in his more fastidious hatting, etc. The next day at dinner, upon being asked if he would take soup, fingering his eyeglasses as if he were about to read a bill of fare, he inquired:

"Is it St. Julien or Mulligatawney?"

"It's bean soup, sir, and plenty good enough for you at that, sir," was the response from the other end of the table. Since then he has resumed his home airs and is metaphorically roosting lower.—Kentucky Yeoman.

Of Mr. Briggs, who was a member of the last parliament, but was not re-elected, it is told that his one great speech was made in opposition to the Napoleon memorial in Westminster Abbey. He came in that night in full evening dress, and waxed eloquent over his subject. "Is there not," he demanded, "some eminent Englishman who might more fitly take a place in the national abbey?" Whereupon "Briggs! Briggs!" roared the house with one voice, and the speech was ended.

Modern Romanticism.

A marked feature of modern romanticism is love of the past, that passionate regret for by-gone fashions which prompts the attempt to patch the new garment of to-day with the old cloth of former wear. The feeling which, early in this century, found inspiration in mediæval lore, and loved to present the old chivalrics in novel and song, is the same which inspires the practical anachronisms of recent time, which in England seeks to reproduce the old ecclesiastical sanctities, which astonishes American cities with a mimicry of Gothic architecture; the same which forty years ago restored the long-disused beard, which now ransacks second-hand furniture stores and remote farmhouses for claw-footed tables and brass-handled bureaus, which drags from the lumber-room the obsolete spinning-wheel, which rejoices in many-cornered dwelling-houses with diminutive window panes—the more unshapely the better, because the more picturesque. A mania, innocent enough in these manifestations, but in its essence identical with that which inspired the knight of La Mancha, the typical example for all generations of romanticism gone wild.

It would be unjust, however, to maintain that the reaching back after old things is the sum of romanticism, as if what we so name were mere conservatism or reactionism. This worship of the past is only an accidental manifestation of a principle whose most comprehensive term is aspiration; a noble discontent and disdain of the present, which, in the absence of creative genius, of power to originate new forms, seeks relief in the past from the weary commonplace of the day.

The essence of romanticism is aspiration. Whether it look backward or forward, there is in it a spirit of adventure: as much of it in the crusaders who sought a sepulchre in the east as in the Spanish navigators who sought an Eldorado in the west; as much in the arctic explorers who would force a way through eternal frost as in the Knights of the Holy Grail; as much in the nineteenth century as in the twelfth, in Garibaldi and Gordon as in Godfrey and Tancred.

The romantic schools of German and English literature were transient phases already outgrown, but the principle of romanticism in literature is immortal—it is the spirit asserting itself through the form. Classicism gives us perfection of form, romanticism fullness of spirit. Both are essential, seldom found united, but both must combine to constitute a masterpiece of literary art.—Frederick Henry Hedge in March Atlantic.

Ignition of Wood by Steam.

The Scientific American has opened its columns to a discussion about the ignition of wood by steam or steam-pipes which seems likely to be very useful. In a recent number one of the many people who do not believe that wood can be set on fire by any steam not superheated, writes to ask why the wooden lagging which is placed around locomotive boilers, and then covered with a sheet-iron "jacket," does not take fire. Although locomotive boilers usually contain steam at a pressure of more than one hundred and twenty pounds to the square inch, the laggings rarely show any signs of charring, even after years of use. If the seams of the sheet-iron jacket get loose, as sometimes happens, sparks from the smokestack may get in and set the laggings on fire, and such accidents have sometimes occurred from the water getting low in the boiler, so as to expose the crown-sheet to the action of the fire, but there is no instance of any scorching, the writer thinks, from boilers in their ordinary condition. As thousands of locomotive engineers and master mechanics must know something of this matter, it is to be hoped that more communications may follow on the subject.

The latest bit of bric-a-brac is a pair of parlor scales with which to weigh the baby.

Cavan.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

The regular meeting of the Cavan Council was held on Wednesday, June 22nd. All the members present; the Reeve in the chair.

A communication was received from Mr. E. A. Macnachtan, County Clerk, notifying the Council that the following rates were required to be raised by Cavan for 1886, viz.: County rate, $1,524; general school rate, $421.

Councillor Fallis reported that the Council as a committee had considered the advisability of opening up the East Quarter line at the 8th concession, and that they had examined the diverted road, and decided to take no action in either case.

Councillor McNeil reported that he had purchased a quantity of cedar for building purposes and had let several contracts, as authorized by the Council.

Councillor Fallis reported having let a contract for road repairing, to John and Jas. Read. It had not been satisfactorily completed, and he recommended that orders for the amount be drawn, and paid when the job was properly finished.—Adopted.

Reeve Ferguson reported having the over-of Road Division No. 3 to hire teams to complete road work, the statute labor not being sufficient.—Adopted.

Dep-Reeve Thorndyke reported that he and Councillor Fallis had let a number of contracts for road improvements.—Adopted.

Mr. W. J. Maxwell overseer of Road Division No 56 was heard with regard to repairing the 13th concession line, which is now in a bad state of repair. On motion of Mr. Thorndyke, seconded by Councillor Boyd, the Council granted the sum of $20 towards making improvements on the said road, Mr. Maxwell to expend the money.

On motion, Mr. Thos. Hunter was heard. He complained that parties while drawing gravel for statute labor from a pit on his premises, destroyed a part of his crop of peas. On motion of Councillor Fallis he was allowed $4 for the crop destroyed.

Mr. Gordon Williamson asked that they grant a small sum of money to repair the 7th concession line west. On motion Councillor Fallis was appointed a committee to build a culvert through the 7th concession road opposite lot 7.

Mr. Jones complained of the bad condition of the 14th concession line and asked for a grant to repair the same.

On motion of Mr. Thorndyke, the Clerk was authorized to draw an order on the treasurer in favor of Joseph Craig, for $23.40, for work done in the 5th concession line, Councillor Fallis to hold the order till work is completed.

Mr. Jackson, was heard, and asked for a grant to repair the 13th concession line, east.

Councillor Boyd was appointed a committee to examine the roads complained of by Mr. Jones and Mr. Jackson, with power to act.

A number of orders were issued on the Treasurer, and the Council adjourned to meet at Mount Pleasant, on July 23rd.

The Fishery Lockout.

The Yankees Want to Come to Terms.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 13.—The next three months will be a most critical period for our fishermen, and upon the earnestness and success of the Dominion Government in protecting the fisheries during that period, depends not only success or adversity to our own people, but to the Americans as well.

CHANGE OF OPINION.

There has been a marvellous change of opinion among New England fishermen during the past few weeks. They sing another song altogether now. The mackerel having all centred in Canadian waters the Americans are beginning to express appreciation of the benefits derived under the Washington treaty, which they themselves deliberately, but now regretfully, renounced.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14, 1886.

LIEUT.-COL. BERNARD, Sir John Macdonald's brother-in-law, who was superannuated some time ago, has left for the West Indies on a holiday trip, taking a member of the Civil Service along with him as a personal attendant. Of course, the civil servant's pay will be continued during his absence.

THE Dominion Government have arranged to give a number of their political supporters an extensive holiday trip at the public expense by appointing a Commissioner to visit the West Indies with the view of promoting closer commercial relations between Canada and those islands. A reduction of taxes upon imports from the West Indies would do more to promote trade with those islands than the appointment of a dozen commissions.

A PORTLAND despatch states that Wallace Graham, solicitor for the Attorney-General of Canada, has served upon the United States Government, through its attorney, a document reciting the circumstances of the seizure of the schooner E. M. Dougherty, and giving a statement of the law under which the vessel was detained. The paper is likely to become historical as the base upon which an important question of international interest will be tried in the courts.

WHILE in Canada our growing crops have been parched through lack of rain, the farmers of Georgia and of the surrounding Southern States, according to the Macon Telegraph, have suffered severely from the terrific rains which have fallen almost daily for three weeks or more. In many sections the watermelon and cantaloupe crops, from which so much has been expected, have been well nigh ruined. Cotton, under the influence of the excessive moisture, has run largely to weed and is in poor condition to withstand the July sun Fields that should now be clean and well cultivated are full of grass, and resemble so many pastures. And the fertilizers, it is feared, have been swept away.

SPEAKING of Sir John's visit to Manitoba the Toronto Mail says:

It is within the mark to say that Sir John Macdonald has contributed more than any other man living or dead to bring about the revolution that has converted this distant hunting ground into a prosperous community.

"It is also within the mark to say remarks the London Advertiser," that Sir John Macdonald has contributed more than any other man living or dead to bring about the revolt that stained the prairie with the blood of some of the flower of Ontario's youth, led to the death a number of misguided half-breeds, took a lunatic to the scaffold, and cost the Dominion millions of dollars. As an offset, "Mr." Caron is "Sir" Adolphe."

Sir John has afflicted the Northwest with two rebellions, and Lieut.-Governor Dewdney, and he is, therefore, under triple bonds to do something to offset the evils his maladministration has imposed upon the country.

Winnipeg as a Military Station.

WINNIPEG, July 12.—The proposition has been mooted among military men of establishing a military station at Winnipeg, from which, in time of war, troops could be sent east or west at short notice. This double advantage of being secure from attack, and of occupying a central position between the two coasts, make Winnipeg the best possible place for a garrison.

Important Information to the Trade.

We have received information from a reliable source that some of the wholesale dealers are endeavoring to injure our brands by representing "that they are not as good as they used to be." This is done for the sole purpose of foisting upon the retailer and the consumer, private and unknown brands, that pay them (the wholesalers) a large profit. It is a well-known and indisputable fact that for the past twenty-five years the reputation and the quality of the justly celebrated and popular brands, CABLE, EL PADRE, and others of our manufacture, have been and always will be maintained, the statements of interested parties to the contrary, notwithstanding. We respectfully beg to impress upon smokers the importance of their insisting upon having our reliable and well known brands, if they desire to avoid smoking cheap trashy cigars, when a little thoughtfulness would have obviated the annoyance and disappointment consequent upon taking whatever is handed to them. Retailers would do well to avoid the persuasive and oratorical jobber, that endeavors to impress upon them the importance of trying private and unknown brands in preference to the CABLE and EL PADRE that have outlived the thousand and 1 brands that have been introduced since the introduction of the CABLE and EL PADRE. Our (5c) CABLE is put up in two sizes, the CONCHA and IMPERIAL QUEEN cigar has a narrow red band, with the word CABLE on it. None other genuine. Our new brand MADRE E HIJO is exceptionally fine and well worth a trial. S. DAVIS & SONS. Factories, Montreal, Toronto branch, 34 Church street.

FLOUR.

There seems to be some misapprehension relative to the price of Flour. I find a number of purchasers stating that the grade of Flour known as "BAKERS"

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

"I am glad," she said one morning, "that I am to see your 'world,' Sir Oswald. You despise mine; I shall be anxious to see what yours is like."

The baronet answered her testily:

"I do not quite understand your remarks about 'worlds.' Surely we live under the same conditions.'"

"Not in the same world of people," she opposed; "and I am anxious to see what yours is like."

"What do you expect to find in what you are pleased to call my world, Pauline?" he asked, angrily.

"Little truth, and plenty of affectation; little honor, and plenty of polish; little honesty, and very high, sounding words; little sincerity, and plenty of deceit."

"By what right do you sit in judgment?" he demanded.

"None at all," replied Pauline; "but as people are always speaking ill of the dear, honest world in which I have lived, I may surely be permitted to criticise the world that is outside it."

Sir Oswald turned away angrily; and Miss Hastings sighed over the girl's willfulness.

"Why do you talk to Sir Oswald in a fashion that always irritates him?" she remonstrated.

"We live in a free country, and have each of us freedom of speech."

"I am afraid the day will come when you will pay a sad price for yours."

But Pauline Darrell only laughed. Such fears never affected her; she would sooner have expected to see the heavens fall at her feet than that Sir Oswald should not leave Darrell Court to her—his niece, a Darrell, with the Darrell face and the Darrell figure, the true, proud features of the race. He would never dare to do otherwise, she thought, and also would not condescend to change either her thought or speech to please him.

"The Darrells do not know fear," she would say; "there never yet was an example of a Darrell being frightened into anything."

So the breach between the uncle and the niece grew wider every day. He could not understand her; the grand, untrained, undisciplined, poetical nature was beyond him—he could neither reach it heights, nor fathom its depths. There were times when he thought that, despite her outward coldness and pride, there was within a soul of fire, when he dimly understood the magnificence of the character he could not read, when he suspected there might be some souls that could not be narrowed or forced into a common groove. Nevertheless he feared her; he was afraid to trust, not the honor, but the fame of his race to her.

"She is capable of anything," he would repeat to himself again and again. "She would fling the Darrell revenues to the wind; she would transform Darrell Court into one huge observatory, if astronomy pleased her—into one huge laboratory, if she gave herself to chemistry. One thing is perfectly clear to me—she can never be my heiress until she is safely married."

And, after great deliberation—after listening to all his heart's pleading in favor of her grace, her beauty, her royal generosity of character, the claim of her name and her truth, he came to the decision that if she would marry Captain Langton, whom he loved perhaps better than any one else in the world, he would at once make his will, adopt her, and leave her heiress of all that he had in the world.

One morning the captain confided in him, telling him how dearly he loved his beautiful niece, and then Sir Oswald revealed his intentions.

"You understand, Aubrey," he said—"the girl is magnificently beautiful—she is a true Darrell; but I am frightened about her. She is not like other girls; she is wanting in tact, in knowledge of the world, and both are essential. I hope you will win her. I shall die content if I leave Darrell Court in your hands, and if you are her husband. I could not pass her over to make her my heir; but if you can persuade her to marry you, you can take the name of Darrell, and you can guide and direct her. What do you say, Aubrey?"

"What do I say?" stammered the captain. "I say this—that I love her so dearly that I would marry her if she had not a farthing. I love her so that language cannot express the depth of my affection for her."

The captain was for a few minutes quite overcome—he had been so long dunned for money, so hardly pressed, so desperate, that the chance of twenty thousand a year and Darrell Court was almost too much for him. His brow grew damp, and his lips pale. All this might be his own if he could but win the consent of this girl. Yet he feared her; the proud, noble face, the grand, dark eyes rose before him, and seemed to rebuke him for his presumptuous hope. How was he to win her? Flattery, sweet, soft words would never do it. One scornful look from her sent his ideas "flying right and left."

"If she were only like other girls," he thought, "I could make her my wife in a few weeks."

Then he took heart of grace. Had he not been celebrated for his good fortune among the fair sex? Had he not always found his handsome person, his low, tender voice, his pleasing manner irresistible? Who was this proud, dark-eyed girl that she should measure the depths of his heart and soul, and find them wanting? Surely he must be superior to the artists in shabby coats by whom she had been surrounded. And yet he feared as much as he hoped.

"She has such a way of making me feel small," he said to himself; "and if that kind of feeling comes over me when I am making her an offer, it will be of no use to plead my suit."

But what a prospect—master of Darrell Court and twenty thousand per annum! He would endure almost any humiliation to obtain that position.

"She must have me," he said to himself—"she shall have me! I will force her to be my wife!"

Why, if he could but announce his engagement to Miss Darrell, he could borrow as much money as would clear off all his liabilities! And how much he needed money no one knew better than himself. He had paid this visit to the Court because three acceptances were out against him in London, and, unless he could come to some settlement of them, he knew what awaited him.

And all—fortune, happiness, wealth, freedom, prosperity—depended on one word from the proud lips that had hardly ever spoken kindly to him. He loved her, too—loved her with a fierce, despairing love that at times frightened himself.

"I should like you," said Sir Oswald, at the conclusion of their interview, "to have the matter settled as soon as you can; because, I tell you, frankly, if my niece does not consent to marry you, I shall marry myself. All my friends are eagerly solicitous for me to do so; they do not like the prospect of seeing a grand old inheritance like this fall into the hands of a willful, capricious girl. But I tell you in confidence, Aubrey, I do not wish to marry. I am a confirmed old bachelor now, and it would be a sad trouble to me to have my life changed by marriage. Still I would rather marry than that harm should come to Darrell Court."

"Certainly," agreed the captain.

"I do not mind telling you still further that I have seen a lady whom, if I marry at all, I should like to make my wife—in fact, she resembles some one I used to know long years ago. I have every reason to believe she is much admired and sought after; so that I want you to settle your affairs as speedily as possible. Mind, Aubrey, they must be settled—there must be no deferring, no putting off; you must have an answer—yes or no—very shortly; and you must not lose an hour in communicating that answer to me."

"I hope it will be a favorable one," said Aubrey Langton; but his mind misgave him. He had an idea that the girl had found him wanting; he could not forget her first frank declaration that she did not like him.

"If she refuses me, have I your permission to tell Miss Darrell the alternative?" he asked of Sir Oswald.

The baronet thought deeply for some minutes, and then said,—

"Yes; it is only fair and just that she should know—that she should learn that if she refuses you she loses all chance of being my heiress. But do not say anything of the lady I have mentioned."

The visitors were coming on Tuesday, and Thursday was the day settled for the ball.

"All girls like balls," thought Captain Langton. "Pauline is sure to be in a good temper then, and I will ask her on Thursday night."

But he owned to himself that he would rather a thousand times have faced a whole battalion of enemies than ask Pauline Darrell to be his wife.

CHAPTER XV.

THE QUEEN OF THE BALL.

It was many years since Darrell Court had been so gay. Sir Oswald had resolved that the ball should be one that should reflect credit on the giver and the guests. He had ordered a fine band of music and a magnificent banquet. The grounds were to be illuminated, colored lamps being placed among the trees; the ballroom was a gorgeous mass of brilliant bloom—tier after tier of magnificent flowers was ranged along the walls, white statues gleaming from the bright foliage, and little fountains here and there sending up their fragrant spray.

Sir Oswald had sent to London for some one to superintend the decorations; but they were not perfected until Miss Darrell, passing through, suggested first one alteration, and then another, until the originators, recognising her superior artistic judgment and picturesque taste, deferred to her, and then the decorations became a magnificent work of art.

Sir Oswald declared himself delighted, and the captain's praises were unmeasured. Then, and then only, Miss Darrell began to feel some interest in the ball; her love of beauty was awakened and pleased—there was something more in the event than the mere gratification of seeing people dance.

The expected visitors had arrived on the Tuesday—Lady Hampton, radiant with expected victory; Elinor, silent, thoughtful, and more gentle than ever, and consequently more pleasing.

Horse Shipments.

yesterday Mr. T. Cavanagh shipped to Montreal five teams of horses with waggons and men to correspond, for work on the short line of the C.P.R., between Montreal and Smiths Falls. Plate Glass Broken.

About a year ago the pane of plate glass in the southern windows of Mr. W. J. Green's store was broken in some mysterious way and last night the pane in the northern window was broken—cracked almost straight across. The cause of the break is unknown, as the building is old and well settled. Fortunately Mr. Green had the glass insured in the Hand in Hand Co., and his loss will be nothing, while the glass makers will profit thereby.

Cricket.

Mr. J. E. Hammond, on behalf of the P. A. A. A. cricket club, has arranged with the Toronto cricket club to play a match on July 24th. The match will be played on the P. A. A. A. grounds here and no doubt will be a lively one. The Torontos are in fine trim and the local club will put a strong team in the field. In the meantime the P. A. A. A. will practice.

Mr. Hammond is also negotiating with the Campbellford club for the return match due the local club. Definite arrangements have not been arrived at, but it is understood that the game will be played at an early date.

The Dunn Replevin Case.

The case of Dunn vs. Cooper, Cochrane, and Dumble, an action of replevin brought by the plaintiff, Thos. Dunn, to recover an organ and other property, seized by Chief Cooper on a distress warrant for a Scott Act fine, was heard before Judge Weller Monday. On application of Mr. O'Meara, counsel for the plaintiff, the names of Inspector Cochrane and Police Magistrate Dumble were struck off, leaving Chief Cooper the only defendant. Mr. O'Meara submitted that under the Scott Act the magistrate had no power to order a fine to be collected by distress, but it should be sued for and recovered as an ordinary debt. The defence claimed that the warrant was dated wrong, and that defendant had not been served with a notice of the judgment before the warrant was issued. His Honor reserved judgment.

Look at Your Bank Bills.

A Montreal despatch says:—It is evident that counterfeiting notes of Canadian banks has become general from their being presented at banks here by customers. The fraud is not confined to a single bank, but is practised on several of the leading institutions. The latest instance is the Bank of Commerce, two counterfeit ten dollar bills of which were presented at the Bank of British North America here and both found to be forgeries. The tint of paper and the number are not clearly printed, and on close examination the lion's face is indistinct, the strokes of the signature are very shaky and the green shading on the back are not at all like the original. Bank officials here say that it requires great care on their part to avoid taking counterfeit notes, they are so frequently presented.

Market Items.

Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather this morning, there was a fair market. Fruits, vegetables, butter and eggs were the principal offerings. Prices were quoted:—Butter, 14c. to 16c.; eggs, 10c. for shipment, 11c. for local use; chickens, per pair, 50c. to 60c.; green peas, shelled, 11c. per quart; new potatoes, 30c. per peck; new turnips, 5c. per bunch; black currants, 11c. to 12½c. per quart; red and white currants and gooseberries, 10c. per quart; raspberries, $1.00 per pail.

Postponed.

Owing to the heavy rain which fell this morning and to-day, the excursion of the Charlotte street Methodist Sunday School to Strickland's grove, Lakefield, has been postponed till Friday next, the 16th inst. Mr. Neil left for Lakefield this morning to make arrangements for the reception of the excursionists on Friday. It is to be hoped that Friday will be a fine day, so that the Sunday School pupils, teachers and their friends may enjoy a pic-nic which they have looked forward to with ardent anticipations.

Extension of the Midland Railway System.

It is reported that one of the objects of Mr. Wm. Wainwright's visit to England is to make arrangements for the extension of the Midland Railway system to Sault Ste. Marie, and that the Grand Trunk directors propose to extend the Midland road east to Ottawa over the old Toronto and Ottawa route. A part of this road is already graded, and most of the right-of-way secured. The extension of the Midland system to Perth and Ottawa, making connection with the Canada Atlantic in Toronto, would give the Grand Trunk two lines between Toronto and Montreal.

Good Prospects for Farmers.

While the farmers are stowing away the hay and gathering in the golden grain, there is one man looking after their interests. Prices of produce may be low but the farmer will find compensation and consolation in the fact that Gough, the Wonderful Cheap Man, is now at the wholesale markets purchasing his stock of fall and winter clothing. This will be sold at bottom prices, so that if wheat keeps at 75 cents a bushel, a bushel will buy as much from Gough as 60 lbs. of a dollar-a-bushel wheat would do before the era of cheap clothing was introduced by Gough, the Wonderful Cheap Man, Arcade buildings, Peterborough.

Big Bear's Rifle.

Yes, Big Bear's rifle, with stock adorned with brass tacks, each one of which is supposed to represent a brave killed in battle, is possessed by Mr. James Hannah, of town, who captured the implement in Big Bear's toupee, near Prince Albert, while engaged with "G" Company of the Midland Battalion. The rifle is a repeating Winchester—16 shooter. On the brass lock of this, Mr. Frank Karah, with Mr. W. A. Sanderson, artistically engraved the following inscription: "Big Bear's rifle, captured by James Hannah, at Prince Albert, N. W. T., during the North-west rebellion." Mr. Hannah will keep the piece of ordinance as a memo of his exploits and battle with the wild men of the North-west.

"Chemong's" New Teacher

The Weekly Brantford Expositor contains a personal reference to Mr. A. E. Kennedy, who, it states, comes to take charge of a school at "Chemong." Mr. Kennedy was presented with addresses by the pupils of Burford public public schools, senior and junior, in which he has been a teacher for 7 years. The report adds:—"The above addresses speak volumes for Mr. Kennedy's abilities as a teacher. He is a rigid disciplinarian, yet his zeal for the general welfare of the children, and his untiring efforts to bring them forward in their various studies, were such as to merit the respect of every scholar under his care. His place will be hard to fill. He goes to take an important charge near Peterborough. I am sure that he carries with him the best wishes of this community for his welfare and success in his new position." On leaving Burford, Mr. Kennedy was also honoured with an address from the members of Burford Masonic Lodge, of which he is past master, having occupied the chair for two years.

The Hamilton Light Twine Binder.

On Tuesday, Mr. Peter Hamilton put in motion, on the farm of Mr. John Tighe, Lot 13, concession 2, Douro, the first of this season's build, of his fine Light Twine Binders. It contains all the latest improvements, and many farmers were present, watching with deep interest the success of its operation, and they were gratified at seeing everything go off like clock work. It is interesting to note that the patent vibrating butt-er, adopted for the first time on this year's binder, proved to be an immense improvement doing its work in a perfect manner. It is a great advance for efficiency of work on the canvas butt-er. The new sheaf carrier, also first used on this year's binder, surpasses everything of the kind now in use. It is a great saving of labour and saves the work of at least one man. Altogether the Hamilton Light Twine Binder of 1886, is a machine that just meets the wants of the farmer, and is equal if not superior to any machine of the kind now made. The great success it met with last season, was very encouraging, and with its important improvents this year, it bids fair to win even greater favor amongst our enterprising farmers, who are anxious to have the best binders built. In addition to the intrinsic excellence of the Hamilton Light Twine Binder, an important additional point in its favor is the easy approach to the factory from all parts of this vicinity. On the rough stony land that is found so often, accident resulting in the breaking of a machine is liable to take place. In that case the convenience of the factory, represents a great saving of time in making repairs and getting the machine ready for work.

Quite a Cane.

In the window of Mr. H. LeBrun there lies on exhibition a curiously carved cane, the handiwork of Mr. A. Laroque, of town. Mr. Laroque carved the stick from a solid piece of maple while working in the shanties last winter. He employed the long evenings at the task and succeeded in turning out a clever piece of work, not art.

On Strike.

The town clock stopped at twenty-five minutes to twelve to-day. Mr. R. W. Muncaster, who has the over-sight of the town time-piece, on investigation found that the minute hand, having become warped by the damp weather, had caught in the wire guaze which too closely covers the dial. The gauze was poked out and the clock proceeded.

Hallelujah Wedding Cake.

The culinary editor of the EXAMINER was summoned from his sanctum this morning to be presented with a neatly wrapped parcel, containing a slice of Hallelujah Wedding cake. Of course the gift was thankfully received. The subsequent mastication, and dreamings which are supposed to arise therefrom, if looks are any criterion, will be pretty rich.

The Timely Rain.

This morning at 12.45 the welcome rain began to descend and continued up to the moment of writing, when it is still gently descending. It is most timely and comes just in time to save the country from a too short harvest. True, its coming will be to the disadvantage of haying operations and excursion parties, but the gain otherwise outweighs every other consideration. There's millions in it!

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 25th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two spurious trusses made in York State, costing me $10. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss for four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KING.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect: is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child sure; and 80 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. DR. WASHINGTON, Throat and Lung Surgeon, 215 Yonge St., Toronto:

St. Thomas, June 30, 1886.

THE JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and so I am now able to attend to my work once more. I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat.

Yours truly, W. H. COX.

Canadian Bank of Commerce.

Proceedings of the Nineteenth Annual Meeting of the Shareholders, Held at the Banking House, Toronto, at Noon on Tuesday, 13th July, 1886.

The President, the Hon. Wm. McMaster having been called to the chair,

It was moved by Hon. S. C. Wood, seconded by W. B. Hamilton, Esq., that the General Manager be appointed Secretary, and that Messrs. Henry Pellatt, R. S. Cassels, and Jas. Browne do act as scrutineers. Carried.

The Secretary then read the following report:—

The Directors beg to present to the Shareholders the 13th Annual Report, accompanied by the usual statement of the Assets and Liabilities of the Bank, at the close of the financial year:—

Balance at credit of Profit and Loss Account, carried forward from June, 1885		$34,192 97
The net profit of the year ended 30th June, 1886, deducting charges of management and making appropriations to cover all bad and doubtful debts sustained during the year, amount to		567,636 97
		$601,829 94
Deduct—
Dividend No. 37, paid January, 1886	$210,000 00
Dividend No. 38, payable July, 1886	210,000 00
		$420,000 00
		$181,829 94
Transferred from Rest Acct		500,000 00
		$681,829 94
Appropriated for bad and doubtful debts	$490,000 00
Placed at credit of Contingent Fund	150,000 00
		$640,00 00
Balance remaining at credit of Profit and Loss Account		$ 41,829 94

Notwithstanding the absence of any material improvement in the condition of business generally, and the low and declining rates obtainable upon loans, the profits of the twelve months ending in June have been fairly satisfactory; so much so, that under ordinary circumstances they would have been amply sufficient for the continuance of our usual 8 per cent dividend. Your Directors, however, in view of the serious shrinkage resulting from the liquidation of securities acquired from several estates of considerable magnitude, determined although with much reluctance, to reduce the rate of dividend from 8 to 7 per cent. for the time being, and, in order to fully cover the losses sustained in this connection, together with probable losses and all shrinkages in values of securities held by the Head Office and Branches, have taken from the Rest Account the sum of $350,000.

The disturbing effects which such appropriations are apt to create in the minds of shareholders, render it very desirable that provision should be made, apart from the Rest Account, for any contingency that may arise. It is also important that the fear of affecting the Rest may not deter the management from dealing promptly with any risks that may assume an unsatisfactory character. The Directors have, therefore, transferred from that fund to Contingent Account the further sum of $150,000, thus leaving the Rest $1,600,000 or 28½ per cent. on the capital of the Bank.

The Directors are pleased to be in a position to assure the shareholders, with the utmost confidence, that the business of the bank is thoroughly sound, legitimate and active; and its ample financial resources are such as will enable their successors to take advantage of any improvement that may take place in the trade of the country.

Having regard to the marked change in the value of money in Chicago, and the fact that the profits could not be made to bear any reasonable proportion to the expenses connected with the agency, unless a much larger amount of the bank's capital were assigned to the agents than the Directors thought it prudent to place there, they felt that it would be in the interest of the shareholders to withdraw from Chicago, which was readily accomplished, as the securities held for the bank's advances, were such as to admit of the agency being wound up on short notice.

The branches of the bank have been inspected during the past year as usual; and the Directors are pleased to state that its officers generally, have discharged their respective duties in a satisfactory manner.

(Signed,) WM. McMASTER,
President.

The following resolutions were then put and carried unanimously:—

Moved by the President, seconded by the Vice-President, That the report of the Directors now read be adopted and printed for the information of the shareholders:—

In moving this resolution, the President spoke as follows:—

The information with reference to the position of the Bank, which it is the duty of the Directors to lay before the shareholders, on the occasion of the Annual Meeting, has been so fully set forth in the Report and accompanying Financial Statement, that I have but little to add. You may, however, desire further particulars with reference to the considerations that influenced the Directors in deciding to reduce the dividend to seven per cent., which shall be readily given.

Our losses on current business, during the last and previous twelve months, were comparatively small, and the earnings of the year that closed in June were sufficient for an eight per cent. dividend, which, under the circumstances, might have been paid.

In order to a correct understanding as to how our position became somewhat changed, it is necessary to refer specially to certain liabilities which turned out very differently from what we had reason to expect.

When alluding in last year's report to the transfer of $75,000 to contingent account, increasing that fund to $150,000, we intimated that this was done for the purpose of covering the loss on the British Canadian Timber and Lumber Company's account, and some other matters of former years still in process of liquidation.

At that time the principal security held for the Timber and Lumber account consisted of 765 miles of timber limits in the Province of Quebec which were represented by the Company as being worth $700,000, together with stores of various kinds, estimated at $190,000. Some time after these assets passed into the hands of Trustees appointed to manage the business, and, if necessary, to wind it up. They estimated the value of the limits, including some stores, at $250,000. These limits were subsequently sold by public auction in Ottawa where the audience was large and the bidding spirited, at a price that netted $158,650. One portion of of this was claimed by another bank and one by the holders of debentures in Scotland. The result was that instead of there being a considerable amount of the contingent fund available for other purposes it fell short of covering the debt of the Timber & Lumber Company alone.

Another liability to which allusion has has been made arose with certain accounts which had for years been conducted in a satisfactory manner. The parties were uniformly reported to be highly respectable, and to be possessed of large means, and were in fact perfectly responsible for such facilities as the bank at any time afforded them, provided these had been employed in the legitimate channels of their ordinary business. It was, however, discovered that, during the period of wild speculation in the North-west, they had become parties to large ventures in Winnipeg property, and North-west and land securities, and had used the bank's means for these purposes. Upon the demand of the bank the debtors furnished security principally on real estate in Manitoba and Ontario, which to all appearance at the time, afforded reasonable margin over and above the bank's claim. But the utter collapse of values in the North-west and the depreciation that ensued in the price of property in the western part of Ontario, especially in towns, rendered the process of liquidation tedious and very disappointing, and the ultimate result was that a considerable loss has been sustained.

We took credit to ourselves at a former meeting for declining to respond to many urgent applications to open branches in Winnipeg and other places in Manitoba, which we did, believing that until the North-west became more of an exporting country there was no legitimate business for the number of banks that had already opened there. But while our policy saved the bank from direct losses in Manitoba, we have not entirely escaped the unfortunate results that overtook the parties who, regardless of the consequences to others, speculated largely in that country.

Now, gentlemen, looking to this loss, looking also to the fact that the contingent fund was entirely absorbed by the Timber and Lumber Company's account, leaving the accounts referred to in last year's report as being in liquidation, unprovided for, looking also to the reduction in the rate of interest and the downward tendency of money generally, I cannot help thinking that on reflection you will regard the action of the Directors in reducing the dividend and making provision for bad and doubtful debts as being judicious and wise under the circumstances.

In dealing with the appropriations two classes of debts, bad and doubtful, had to be considered. From the former little, if anything, can be expected. From the latter considerable may be secured, as the directors in their determination to make the most ample provision for losses, have probably estimated some of the items below their value.

With reference to the $150,000 placed at the credit of Contingent Account, this I regard as being a very desirable appropriation, as, in the absence of such a fund, the natural tendency of the management is to delay dealing with doubtful accounts, hoping that they may improve. In most cases, however, the reverse is the result.

A word with reference to our business in Chicago. When we first opened there, the rate of interest ruled at from 5 to 9 per cent., but Chicago having become to a great extent the centre of financial operations for the Western States, money is almost as cheap there as in New York; and if the Government tax be added to the ordinary expenses it will be found as stated in the report, that unless a much larger amount of the Bank's Capital were assigned to the agents, in Chicago, than the Directors deemed it prudent to place there, the profits could not be made to bear any reasonable proportion to the expenses.

Having referred to the different subjects of importance embraced in the Report, I desire to make an announcement bearing upon my future individual relations to the Bank.

Admonished by my advancing years and the state of my health, of the necessity of comparative rest, I have decided to withdraw from the Presidency of the Bank. I do so with the less hesitation, inasmuch as the position of the Bank's affairs will, I feel assured, satisfy all reasonable anticipations on the part of Shareholders, who may look forward to its future with every confidence.

I am a large holder of the Bank's shares, but apart from this consideration, in view of my long connection with the institution, I will always feel a lively interest in its success, and if my experience is regarded of any value to the shareholders, they can have my services as a director as long as my health permits. But I shall refer to this subject more fully at a further stage of the proceedings, when I purpose to move an amendment to one of our by-laws, with a view to the strengthening of the Board.

Moved by the President, and seconded by the Vice-President, that the following by-law be passed, namely:—

BY-LAW NO. 29.

The shareholders of the Canadian Bank of Commerce enact as follows:—

1. The number of directors of the bank to be elected annually by the shareholders, shall be ten, of whom three shall constitute a quorum.

2. Section 5 of the by-laws of the bank passed on the 12th day of July, 1881, is hereby repealed, and section 7 is hereby amended by the insertion of the words "ten directors," in lieu of the words "eight directors," where the same occur.

3. The by-laws of the said bank passed on the 12th day of July, 1881, as hereby amended, are hereby re-enacted and confirmed.

In moving the adoption of this resolution the President remarked that he had taken occasion lately, in view of the condition of his own health, and the increasing age of several of his co-directors, to impress upon them the necessity for strengthening the Board, by the introduction of new men, and he was pleased to be able to submit for their approval the name of Mr. Henry W. Darling the President of the Board of Trade, as one having a large and varied experience of mercantile matters, well known to this community as a man of high character and financial ability and who, he felt assured, would render good service to the Bank. Also the name of Mr. Geo. A. Cox, of Peterborough, who had given abundant evidence of mercantile skill, the architect of his own fortune, and who, in many ways, would be a great acquisition to the directorate, and he had every confidence in commending these to the favorable consideration of the shareholders as co-adjutors.

Moved by Edward Martin, Esq., Q. C., Hamilton, seconded by Geo. Rosch, Esq., Hamilton.

That the thanks of the meeting are due, and are hereby tendered to the President, Vice-President, and other directors for their careful attention to the interests of the bank during the past year.

Mr. Edward Martin, Q.C., of Hamilton, in moving the resolution, commended the President and Directors for their courage and prudence in frankly admitting the losses that had unfortunately been made, and in making provision for them. The shareholders were under a deep debt of gratitude to the President for the attention he had given to the affairs of the Bank since its incorporation, which had been of the most assiduous, unselfish, and devoted character. While no one would grudge him his well earned rest, which the state of his health demanded, it was gratifying to know the Bank would still have the benefit of his experience and counsel as a Director:—The President was to be congratulated upon the choice he had made of new Directors. He had known Mr. Darling intimately since he began his business career in Hamilton. He had been a success there, and a still greater success in Toronto, and he felt satisfied no more desirable man could be found for the position. The reputation and business ability of Mr. Cox was also well known throughout the Province, and such an addition to the directors could not fail to be advantageous to the bank.

Moved by Wm. Hendrie, Esq., Hamilton, seconded by T. Mackelcan, Esq., Q. C. Hamilton,

That the thanks of the meeting be also tendered to the General Manager, Assistant General Manager, and other officials of the bank for the satisfactory discharge of their respective duties during the past year.

Moved by Geo. A. Cox, Esq., Peterboro, seconded by Hon. S. C. Wood, that the ballot box be now opened and remain open till 2 o'clock this day for the receipt of ballot tickets for the election of directors, the poll to be closed, however, whenever five minutes shall have elapsed without a vote being tendered.

The Scrutineers then presented the following report:

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE.

By reference to our news columns, it will be seen that at the last annual meeting of the shareholders of the Bank of Commerce, Mr. Geo. A. Cox was elected a member of the new board of directors. This is an absolute honour; and considering the circumstances, it is an exceptional mark of distinction and confidence in Mr. Cox's business and financial abilities. There are scores of heavy shareholders of the bank, ordinarily eligible for the position, and the selection of Mr. Cox; is a tribute to his financial and personal fitness for the position, of which he may be justly proud. During his residence in Peterborough Mr. Cox has built up an honourable reputation as a successful, safe-going and far-seeing business man. That his reputation in this respect has become provincial, is evidenced by the flattering appointment alluded to, an honor to the recipient, which is reflected on the town, whose present leading position and excellent prospects are in a large measure due to the energy, enterprise and public spirit of Mr. Cox.

The Bank has been fortunate in securing a good head as well as directorate. Mr. Darling, who succeeds Hon. Mr. McMaster as president, brings to the duties of his new office a large and varied commercial experience, he having been president of the Toronto Board of Trade for some time. He possesses the requisite energy and matured judgment, and not the least of his recommendations is the unanswerable fact that he has been a successful business man. With its new president and efficient, capable and responsible board of directors, the Canadian Bank of Commerce starts on another year's business under conditions that assure it a continuance, if not an increase, of the patronage it has enjoyed in the past.

Hon. Mr. McMaster, the retiring president, has, during his incumbency, diligently applied to the promotion of the interests of the bank, his great energy and ability, with the result of placing the business and standing of the Canadian Bank of Commerce on a solid basis. With the weight of years, he feels the need of rest, and retires from the position of president of the bank he established, with an honourable record; and with the satisfaction of seeing his protege take its place amongst the foremost of our successful and solid financial institutions.

Important Information to the Trade.

We have received information from a reliable source that some of the wholesale dealers are endeavoring to injure our brands by representing "that they are not as good as they used to be." This is done for the sole purpose of foisting upon the retailer and the consumer, private and unknown brands, that pay them (the wholesalers) a large profit. It is a well-known and indisputable fact that for the past twenty-five years the reputation and the quality of the justly celebrated and popular brands, CABLE, EL PADRE, and others of our manufacture, have been and always will be maintained, the statements of interested parties to the contrary, notwithstanding. We respectfully beg to impress upon smokers the importance of their insisting upon having our reliable and well known brands, if they desire to avoid smoking cheap trashy cigars, when a little thoughtfulness would have obviated the annoyance and disappointment consequent upon taking whatever is handed to them. Retailers would do well to avoid the persuasive and oratorical jobber, that endeavors to impress upon them the importance of trying private and unknown brands in preference to the CABLE and EL PADRE that have outlived the thousand and 1 brands that have been introduced since the introduction of the CABLE and EL PADRE. Our (5c) CABLE is put up in two sizes, the CONCHA and IMPERIAL QUEEN cigar has a narrow red band, with the word CABLE on it. None other genuine. Our new brand MADRE E HIJO is exceptionally fine and well worth a trial. S. DAVIS & SONS. Factories, Montreal, Toronto branch, 34 Church street.

Chiniquy on Romanism.

A Long Lecture in Reply to Archbishop Lynch—"Is the Church of Rome Idolatrous"—Is it the True Church of Christ?

About six hundred persons assembled in St. Paul's church yesterday evening to hear Mr. Chiniquy's lecture in reply to Archbishop Lynch's letter claiming that the Roman Catholic Church is not an idolatrous church, and that it is the Church of Christ.

After singing and prayer, Rev. Mr. Bennett in a short speech, introduced Mr. Chiniquy, who was greeted with applause on rising, and on announcing the subject of the address. Mr. Chiniquy began by reading from the Sacred Scriptures, taking as the basis of his remarks the 2nd chapter of the second epistle of Paul to the Thessalonians, from the 3rd to the 11th verse.

He said this was probably one of

THE MOST TERRIBLE PROPHECIES

in God's word. Paul with his prophetic mind, through these long years of the future saw a man coming into the the temple of God, making people believe that he had power over God, and believing that God could not take this power away from him. He would form a church and religion so grand and lavish that even the elect would be in danger of being deceived. The question would naturally arise, who will this man be, and where will he be. He (the speaker) came in the name of Jesus to answer this question. It might be surprising to see any old man 77 years of age, leaving home to answer such a question, He his hearers against their friends of the Church of Rome, but he came to tell of those things which he had seen with his own eyes. He held that the prophecy of Paul, which he had read, of which Christ also spoke, when the mystery of iniquity should be at work, and when a false religion of so bright a color of Christianity that it would be difficult for the elect to distinguish between the false and the true, was being accomplished. He was confident that among his hearers there were many who knew not why they were Protestants. They might have been told that their fathers had fought for and secured rights, but they were not really Protestants because they did not "protest" against Romanism. Although they saw errors in the Roman Church, they also believed it was a Christian Church. They were coming along like the beautiful smooth waters above a cataract, and, if not diverted, would surely go over the fall. It was true that England was going back to Romanism, one half of the Episcopal ministers being Catholic in disguise and in the United States it was the same. Although he (the speaker) was advised by his doctor not to go from home, yet, knowing that Jesus gave his life for him, and if he would give his life to save the Protestants of Canada, he would only be doing what Christ had done for him.

In the first place he wished to show that

THE CHURCH OF ROME WAS IDOLATROUS.

Every priest and bishop of the Church of Rome believed that he is above God; that he has more power than God; and that God cannot deprive him of his power. The Roman Catholic priest was that man whom Paul referred to "who appeareth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." The Roman Church was not to be overcome by abuse, but to be won by love, similar to that of Jesus. Although it was necessary to love Roman Catholics, it was not necessary to love their errors. Protestants must protest against their errors, pray for them and train their children to keep on the right course. Some, no doubt, would be surprised to hear him say such things against Catholics who professed Christ, and built beautiful churches in which to worship him. The Christ which Catholics worshipped was an idol—

AN OLD PAGAN IDOL—

which the Pope had stolen from the Pagans. It was because Catholics addressed these false gods as Christ that Protestants were deceived. He referred to the Gospel of Matthew, 24th chapter, from 22nd to 26th verses, to show that Christ himself had shewn that even his followers might be deceived. But he gave a clear description of their character which could not deceive. The first trait, that they had many false Christs; secondly, shewed signs and wonders; and thirdly, they employed secret chambers; These were all

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE ROMANISTS.

He (the speaker) had made their Christs with his own hands, during his 25 years of Roman priesthood. These Christs were small wafers made of wheat flour and water, pressed in irons made for the purpose, which were never shewn to the outside world. These were their mysteries of iniquity. There was a law passed in the Church of Rome, which prohibited, on penalty of death, the exhibiting of these irons. (Here the lecturer held up a set of the irons, referred to, to view.) According to this decree, he MUST BE PUT TO DEATH.

He went on to explain how after these wafers were baked, he used to take them to the church and say mass over them. Afterwards he placed them in a small silver box and pronounced over them five magic words in Latin, when he had to believe that Christ came down and transformed himself into wafers—that these wafers were transformed into the the real body and blood of Christ. He had to believe that God was compelled to do this, even though the night before his hands were steeped in iniquity. All Roman Catholics believed that the priests of the church could turn these wafers into Christ's body and blood, and should a wafer be broken into a thousand pieces, each one would be a Christ.

His hearers would ask why they do these foolish things. The answer was in Christ's words: "Because they would not receive the truth." Roman Catholics placed tradition above the Bible and explain the Bible by tradition.

SECRET CHAMBERS.

With regard to the secret chambers alluded to in the 24th chapter, which Christ said would be a character of the false religion, these were a feature of Romanism. Over every Roman Catholic altar was in which the Christs or wafers, not used, were kept. None but the priests had access to this chamber. He referred his hearers to any priest or bishop of the church to confirm his statement.

The lecturer told of the firm belief Catholics had in these wafers, which they believed were Christ. When he carried them around with him to places where there was sickness, those in the neighborhood came to worship. With regard to these, Christ said: "Wherefore if they shall say unto you, behold, he is in the desert, go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chamber, believe it not."

The speaker prayed that the poor Catholics might be roused from their idolatry. He said he came to encourage Protestants to pull down the modern Babylon. They were not sent to Canada to get rich. He believed that God, seeing the downfall of the French Canadians, had sent the Protestants to conquer and RAISE THEM UP.

They had forgotten their duty. He compared the Protestants and French Canadians to the rich man who allowed Lazarus, the poor man to die at his gate. The rich man was not sent to hell because he was sick, but because he did not divide with the poor man. The Protestant's fate would be the same as the rich man's, if they did not give of their treasure—Christianity—to the French Canadians. The Church of Rome must be destroyed, but not by persecuting or insulting, but by the sword of the spirit which God had put in the hands of Protestants, and by Protestants so living that their virtues would lighten the darkness of Romanism. If they did not do their duty God would take the Romanists as whereas, if they were true to their trust, they might lead the Catholics to the Saviour and to a mansion prepared for all. He (the speaker) contended that the Protestants were now being led by the Roman Catholics, as was also the governments. In this there was great danger. Romanism had not changed. He had in his possession a secret book, issued by the Pope, which said that those heratic Protestants,

A ROD TO PUNISH THEM;

MUST NOT BE TOLERATED;

if they remained obstinate, they must be excommunicated and exterminated. The Holy Pope, Gregory the 7th, did not think it a sin to kill a heretic, but rather a virtue. Because Romanists did not come and cut his throat, he held, was because they were not strong enough, not because they would consider it a righteous act. He challenged any Bishop to deny his statements. The book in his possession he secured when a priest of the church.

Here the lecturer mentioned the amount of money he had expended in endeavouring to REFORM CATHOLICS.

He had succeeded in converting twenty-four priests and had hopes of others. As a result of this he had been condemned to death and on three occasions in day light, Catholics had attempted to take his life, each time being

LED BY PRIESTS.

The lecturer continued describing some of the attacks made upon him, in Quebec, Montreal, and Antagonish, Nova Scotia. They had also set fire to his church and College, built with his own money, and also burnt on two occasions, nearly all his books, presses, type, etc.

In conclusion he asked his hearers to pray for him and also for the Catholics. He hoped that when they were asked to give toward a fund for the evangelization of the Romanists they would give liberally, and by so doing assist in bringing them to Jesus.

A liberal collection was taken up for the benefit of the lecturer.

Mr. Chiniquy at the conclusion of his address offered a number of his books for sale.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

Lady Hampton was delighted with the idea of the ball.

"You must make a bold stroke for a husband on that evening, Elinor," she said. "You shall have a superb dress, and I shall quite expect you to receive and accept an offer from Sir Oswald."

Elinor Rocheford raised her eyes. There was something wistful in their expression.

"Oh, aunt," she said, "I like the captain so much better!"

Lady Hampton did not lose her good humor—Elinor was not the first refractory girl she had brought to her senses.

"Never mind about liking the captain, my dear; that is only natural. He is not in love with you. I can see through the whole business. If Darrell Court goes to Miss Darrell, he will marry her. He can marry no girl without money, because he is, I know, over head and ears in debt. Major Penryn was speaking of him to-day. The only way to prevent his marriage with Miss Darrell is for you to take Sir Oswald yourself."

Elinor's face flushed.

Lady Hampton certainly understood the art of evoking the worst feelings. Jealousy, envy, and dislike stirred faintly in the gentle heart of her niece.

"I hope you will do your very best to win Sir Oswald's affections," continued Lady Hampton, "for I should not like to see Darrell Court fall into the hands of that proud girl."

"Nor should I," assented Miss Rocheford.

The evening of the ball arrived at last, and Lady Hampton stood like a fairy godmother in Elinor's dressing-room, superintending the toilet that was to work such wonders. Lady Hampton herself looked very imposing in her handsome dress of black velvet and point lace, with diamond ornaments. Elinor's dress was a triumph of art. Her fresh, fair, gentle loveliness shone to perfection, aided by her elaborate costume of white silk and white lace, trimmed with green and silver leaves. The ornaments were all of silver—both fringe and leaves; the head-dress was a green wreath with silver flowers. Nothing could have been more elegant and effective. There was a gentle flush on the fair face, and a light in the blue eyes.

"That will do, Elinor," said Lady Hampton, complacently. "Your dress is perfection. I have no fear now—you will have no rival."

Perhaps Lady Hampton had never disliked Pauline Darrell more than on that night, for the magnificent beauty of the girl had never been so apparent. Sir Oswald had given his niece carte blanche in respect to preparation for the ball, but she had not at first taken sufficient interest in the matter to send to London, as he wished, for a dress. Later on she had gone to the large wardrobe, where the treasures accumulated by the Ladies Darrell lay. Such shining treasures of satin, velvet, silk, cashmere, and such profusion of laces and ornaments were there! She selected a superb costume—a magnificent amber brocade, embroidered with white flowers, gorgeous, beautiful, artistic. It was a dress that had been made for some former Lady Darrell.

How well it became her! The amber set off her dark beauty as a golden frame does a rich picture. The dress required but little alteration; it was cut square, showing the white, stately, graceful neck, and the sleeves hung after the Grecian fashion, leaving the round white arms bare. The light shining upon the dress changed with every movement; it was as though the girl was enveloped in sunbeams. Every lady present envied that dress, and pronounced it to be gorgeous beyond comparison.

Pauline's rich curls of dark hair were studded with diamond stars, and a diamond necklace clasped her white throat—this was Sir Oswald's present. Her artistic taste had found yet further scope; for she had enhanced the beauty of her dress by the addition of white daphnes shrouded in green leaves.

Sir Oswald looked at her in admiration—her magnificent beauty, her queenly figure, her royal grace and ease of movement, her splendid costume, all impressed him. From every fold of her shining dress came a rich, sweet, subtle perfume; her usually pale face had on it an unwonted flush of delicate rose-leaf color.

"If she would but be like that sweet Elinor!" thought Sir Oswald, "I could not wish for a more beautiful mistress for Darrell Court."

She stood by his side while he received his guests, and her dignified ease delighted him.

"Had she been some Eastern queen," he thought, "her eccentricities would have hurt no one. As it is——" and Sir Oswald concluded his sentence by a grave shake of the head.

The captain, pleased with Miss Rocheford's graceful loveliness, had been amusing himself by paying her some very choice compliments, and she was delighted with them.

"If Sir Oswald were only like him!" she thought; and Aubrey Langton, meeting the timid, gentle glance, said to himself that he must be careful—he had no wish to win the girl's heart—he should be quite at a loss to know what to do with it.

When he saw Pauline his courage almost failed him.

"How am I to ask that magnificent girl to marry me?" he said.

Sir Oswald had expressed a wish that Aubrey and Pauline would open the ball; it would give people an idea of what he wished, he thought, and prevent other gentlemen from "turning her head" by paying her any marked attention. Yet he knew how difficult it would be for any one to win Pauline's regard. She made no objection when he expressed his wish to her, but she did not look particularly pleased.

Captain Langton understood the art of dancing better perhaps than the art of war; he was perfect in it—even Pauline avowed it. With him dancing was the very poetry of motion. The flowers, the lights, the sweet, soft music, the fragrance, the silvery sound of laughter, the fair faces and shining jewels of the ladies, all stirred and charmed Pauline's imaginative nature; the scene was bright and vivid, fancies to her, and touched the poetical beauty dearer still. A glow came over her face, a light into her proud, dark eyes, her lips were wreathed in smiles—no one had ever seen Pauline so beautiful before.

"You enjoy this, do you not?" said Aubrey Langton, as he watched her beautiful face.

"I shall do so," she replied, "very much indeed;" and at what those words implied the captain's courage fell to zero.

He saw how many admiring eyes followed her; he knew that all the gentlemen in the room were envying him in his position with Miss Darrell. He knew that, pretty as some of the girls were, Pauline outshone them as the sun outshines the stars; and he knew that she was queen of the fete—queen of the ball.

"This is the first time you have met many of the county people, is it not?" he asked.

She looked round indifferently.

"Yes, it is the first time," she replied.

"Do you admire any of the men? I know how different your taste is from that of most girls. Is there any one here who has pleased you?"

She laughed.

"I cannot tell," she answered; "you forget this is the first dance. I have had no opportunity of judging."

"I believe that I am jealous already," he observed.

She looked at him; her dark eyes made his heart beat, they seemed to look through him.

"You are what?" she asked. "Captain Langton, I do not understand."

He dared not repeat the words.

"I wish," he said, with a deep sigh, "that I had all the talent and all the wealth in the world."

"For what reason?" she inquired.

"Because you would care for me then."

"Because of your talent and wealth!" she exclaimed. "No, that I should not."

"But I thought you admired talent so much," he said, in surprise.

"So I do; but mere talent would never command my respect, nor mere wealth."

"The two together might," he suggested.

"No. You would not understand me, Captain Langton, were I to explain. Now this dance is over, and I heard you engage Miss Rocheford for the next."

"And you," he said, gloomily—"what are you going to do?"

"To enjoy myself," she replied; and, from the manner in which her face brightened when he left her, the captain feared she was pleased to be quite rid of him.

CHAPTER XVI.

PAULINE'S BRIGHT FANCIES.

The ball at Darrell Court was a brilliant success. Sir Oswald was delighted, Lady Hampton complimented him so highly.

"This is just as it ought to be, Sir Oswald," she said. "One who can give such entertainments as this should not think of retiring from a world he is so well qualified to adorn. Confess, now, that under the influence of that music you could dance yourself."

Sir Oswald laughed.

"I must plead guilty," he said. "How beautiful Miss Rocheford looks to-night!"

"It is well for you, Sir Oswald, that you have not heard all the compliments that the dear child has lavished on you; they would have made you vain."

Sir Oswald's face brightened with pleasure.

"Is your niece pleased? I am very glad indeed. It was more to give her pleasure than from any other motive that I gave the ball."

"Then you have succeeded perfectly. Now, Sir Oswald, do you not see that what I said was true—that an establishment like this requires a mistress? Darrell Court always led the hospitalities of the county. It is only since no lady has lived here that it has fallen into the background."

"It shall be in the background no longer," said Sir Oswald. "I think my first ball is a very successful one. How happy everybody looks!"

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pay them a larger profit, the consumer being the loser thereby.

Final Revision.

Yesterday Judge Weller held final Revising Court for the townships of Haliburton, Dysart and Glamorgan at Haliburton. There were 25 Reformers added to the list and several corrections made. The Conservatives added 5 names. Mr. Dover, of Haliburton, appeared for the Conservatives, and Mr. W. A. Stratton for the Reformers.

Transatlantic Orders.

Messrs. Meldrum, Davidson & Co. have been honored with other orders from Liverpool and Glasgow—for several tons of flour. The previous consignments gave such excellent satisfaction that more of their prime flour is wanted in the old country. The firm is to be congratulated on the opening of so important a trade. To show how the commercial circle is completed, the shipping of flour to England makes a local demand for wheat. Messrs. Meldrum, Davidson & Co. have purchased seven thousand bushels of wheat, now in store in Stevenson's storehouse.

Aids to Sight.

The number of persons young and old, whose sight is affected in some form or other is very great, and seems to increase daily. On the other hand it is evident that as nature fails in this respect, science comes to the rescue. The attention of all those who require aids to their sight is called to the fact that Mr. P. H. Morris, the eminent Oculist-Optician, will on Tuesday and Wednesday next, July 20th and 21st visit Mr. John McKee's drug store, George street Peterborough, for the purpose of adjusting the B. Laurance Pebble and other spectacles and eyeglasses, to all who may wish to avail themselves of the opportunity. As Mr. Morris fits these glasses on thoroughly scientific principles, and has a reputation of giving satisfaction in every instance, it behooves every person whose sight is defective to avail themselves of this opportunity of having the most perfect pebble spectacles adjusted to their needs, so as to last many years, and to comfort and strengthen their sight.

Well-Deserved Compliments.

Referring to Mr. Cox's election as one of the directors of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, the Toronto World says:

"Geo. A. Cox will be a strong man, able to bring new business, of first-class judgment, and competent to render still further service to the concern. He is in touch with the business and the business wants of the day. He has had considerable experience with other financial corporations that ought to stand him good stead in the new duties. The Bank of Commerce is Toronto's greatest financial institution, it is intimately bound up with the interests of Ontario generally, and the public will be glad to know that the new blood will give new energy and new life, that it will still more than ever be up with the times, and that the old captain will still have an eye on its course."

The Globe says:—"Mr. Cox and Mr. Davidson are both men of large means, and their business talent is evidenced by their success."

Mr. Edward Martin, Q.C., of Hamilton, in referring to the newly appointed directors, said he had known Mr. Darling intimately since he began his business career in Hamilton. He had been a success there, and a still greater success in Toronto, and he felt satisfied no more desirable man could be found for the position. The reputation and business ability of Mr. Cox was also well known throughout the province, and such an addition to the directorate could not fail to be advantageous to the Bank.

Police Court.

Continuation of Scott Act Cases.

The charge against R. N. Roddy, for a breach of the Scott Act, enlarged from Monday, was called for hearing, at the police court this morning.

Mr. Roddy failed to put in appearance.

Mr. W. H. Moore, counsel for the defendant, stated that he expected Mr. Roddy to be present, and he thought it would be better in the interests of the administration of justice to have him present. A warrant might be issued for his arrest.

The magistrate pointed out that the case had been enlarged twice to accommodate the defendant.

Mr. Moore said he fully expected Mr. Roddy would appear on the 8th and on the 12th, but on the first occasion he was ill, and the second he went to Belleville. He had not been instructed as to what Mr. Roddy's defence would be.

The magistrate suggested that the witnesses who were present should be heard. It would be a pity to bring them to court again.

Mr. Moore consented, and the case was proceeded with.

Mr. R. E. Wood, County Crown Attorney, asked the magistrate to note that he appeared on behalf of the Crown.

The magistrate noted Mr. Wood's presence, and the first witness was called.

Martin Potter testified that he drank lemonade and what he thought was whiskey at Roddy's between the 31st of May and the 6th of July on two or three occasions. He paid for the lemonade but he did not pay for the whiskey, nor was it paid for by anyone. He simply asked for a drink, and was given lemonade, and afterwards whiskey. The glass in which the lemonade was given was small, but it was full. He and his companion waited around the bar for a while, when Reynolds, the bar-keeper, asked them to have a drink and they accepted the drink of this stuff. When he went in he asked for a drink, expecting to get "something" if it was there. It seemed to be a rule to give lemonade first and then this "stuff." He did not know whether he had two or three drinks, but the performance was the same on each occasion.

Two witnesses gave evidence that they drank at Roddy's between the dates mentioned. One had Moxie and the other a drink with some intoxicating liquor in it. The liquor was not paid for.

Wm. Reynolds, was sworn and testified that he was proprietor of the C.P.R. Hotel bar, which he had leased for one year. He put in a lease in support of his statement. He stated that he had given liquor to the witnesses, and others, for which he received no consideration.

After hearing the evidence of two other witnesses, who gave evidence much the same as the first, the court adjourned till three o'clock.

The bodies of Norton Marks and Chas. W. Blake, who were drowned a week ago while they were bathing a short distance from Bay View, were found floating in the bay at Hamilton Monday morning.

Mr. Ellis, of the Cobourg Collegiate Institute staff, has been in town during the past few days.

Mr. M. O'Brien, principal of the Lindsay Separate School, formerly a Peterborough boy, is in town visiting friends.

Mr. R. Lees, Mathematical and Science master of the Lindsay High School, and principal of the Lindsay Model School, was in town yesterday.

Mr. Hugh Davidson, of Smith, has been appointed one of the judges on the dairy products at the Provincial Exhibition to be held this year in Guelph.

Mr. James Gillogly, the pushing canvasser and collector for the Lindsay Post was in town to-day. Although he does not sing "I've got her on the list," etc., yet these unprofessional visits would indicate that "he's going to marry, Yum Yum."

The British Elections.

The totals at midnight were 326 Conservatives and Liberal unionists, against 252 Gladstonians and Parnellites. The final figures are estimated as follows:—Conservatives, 323; Liberal-unionists, 73; Gladstonians, 188; Parnellites, 86. There remain 32 constituencies to be heard from.

The Coolest Man in the French Army.

"The coolest man I ever knew was old Victor de St. Hilaire, the colonel of an infantry regiment that saw some service in Algeria," said Colonel Henri Dubois, one of a party of French officers who, having halted to take a look at Siam on their way home from the Tonquin war, had come to dine with us on board of a British gun-boat which had somehow found its way up the Mei-Nam River.

"I've known men," he continued, "who managed to put on a great show of coolness in time of danger, though they were really very much excited; but there was no putting-on with St. Hilaire—it came as natural to him as eating his dinner. All his hair-breadth escapes (and he had had so many that he could hardly count them himself) had left him as cool as before, and it really seemed as if dangers passed him by because he would not condescend to notice that they were there at all. Once his men mutinied, and two of them clapped their bayonets to his breast as if to run him through; but the colonel only smiled, and said, as quietly as ever, 'Be careful, my lads; you might hurt me.'

"Now it happened that in Colonel St. Hilaire's regiment there was a peppery young sub-lieutenant who was as hot as the colonel was cool. With him it was always (as you English say) 'a word and a blow, and the blow first.' He had fought so many duels that the soldiers used to call him 'Sudden Death,' and to say that the best way to end the war would be for him to challenge the enemy's whole army, man by man. Well, one day this lieutenant had committed some fault, for which the colonel gave him such a scolding that the young fellow's hot blood couldn't bear it any longer. Quick as lightning he whipped out a pistol and fired right at St. Hilaire's face, so close that the muzzle almost touched him. But the pistol missed fire, and the colonel said, quite coolly, 'Forty-eight hours' arrest for not keeping your arms in proper order.'"

"And was that all the lieutenant got?" asked a dozen voices at once, in undisguised amazement.

"That was all: and I can tell you that he thought it was quite enough—Ha! general, good-evening. I was just telling these gentlemen how you once put me under arrest for not having my pistols in working order."—David Ker, in Harper's Magazine for March.

Swindlers as Bible-Distributors.

The ubiquitous swindler has evolved a new plan by which to swindle the honest farmer. A chap in clerical broadcloth and white choker enters a farmhouse and asks for lodging or dinner, as the case may be. During his stay he announces himself to be a traveling Bible-distributor in the service of a religious institution, and he generally goes so far as to present to the family a handsome Bible from a well-filled valise. He is careful to say that his society requires its distributing members to pay their own way, and exhibits vouchers therefor. After partaking of the good folks' hospitality he prepares to leave, and asks for his bill. He is generally told no charge is made, but he calls attention to "the rules," and insists on paying 25 cents per meal. Then he mildly requires a receipt on his blank form, "a voucher, you know," and he gets the farmer to sign it. In ninety days there is a notice from a neighboring bank to the pious farmer to call and pay the note for $126.20 which it bought and which bears the farmers' signature.—Madison (Wis.) Journal.

EGAN'S IMPERIAL TRUSS

Read the following extract from a letter of a well-known citizen of St Catharines,—hundreds like it:

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 25th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN.—Being over 70 years of age, and over 20 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two spring-less trusses made in York State, costing me $40. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down. It holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. D. KING.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every case; and 9 out of every 10 of adults. Be assured—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. When writing please mention this paper. Address

DR. WASHINGTON, Throat and Lung Surgeon, 218 Yonge St., Toronto:

St. Thomas, June 28, 1886.

THE JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and as I am now able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat.

Yours truly,
W. H. COX.

Important Judgments

In Scott Act Cases—The Charge Against A. Faucher Dismissed—John Condon Fined Fifty Dollars, and an Order Issued for the Committal of McFarlane.

Police Magistrate Dumble delivered judgment in the Faucher, Condon and McFarlane Scott Act cases at the police court this morning. The following is the judgment in

THE FAUCHER CASE.

In this case a number of young men hired Faucher's steamer for a trip down the river. On their way down they call at Faucher's hotel and get refreshments, breakfast, lemonade, etc. While in the bar-room a number of other persons are there, some of whom ask for whiskey and are told by Faucher that he is not selling. No intoxicating liquor is sold or seen in the bar-room. To one of them, a personal friend of Faucher's he says "if you want anything strong, go up stairs." He, and a friend who evidently overheard the remark, to go up stairs to the dining-room and Faucher from his bedroom, a story higher, brings down a bottle of whiskey and put it on the table, from which the three drank. No money is paid for the whiskey. On the return trip the friend is again treated to whiskey by Faucher. There is no evidence of other drinking. The party spent considerable money in the house for meals, drinks, cigars, etc.

Is this giving of the whiskey a breach of the Act?

Faucher swears that it was an act of courtesy extended by him to his friend—that he had not at the time any liquor for sale in the house. That the liquor in question was from a bottle owned by a guest in the house, which he took the liberty of using.

Now, while I think it is a dangerous thing for a hotel-keeper to give liquor to patrons of his house, who may be spending money there, and such conduct, if liberally resorted to, may leave him open to a charge of selling by subterfuge, yet I think that in the circumstances of this case I would be somewhat straining the evidence if I held the charge sustained. There were three parties at the house, yet, except as mentioned, there is no evidence of liquor being used. The day was Sunday, and the people who would beat such a place on that day would be such people as Faucher if selling at all, might think himself safe in selling to. I give the benefit of all doubt to the defendant. The charge is dismissed with costs. No fees to the witnesses as they are people who do not require them.

THE CONDON CASE.

In this case the magistrate held John Condon responsible for the sale of liquor at his house, and found him guilty of the charge, imposing a fine of $50 and costs.

MCFARLANE FOUND GUILTY.

The magistrate also found John McFarlane guilty of the charge preferred against him for selling liquor contrary to the Scott Act, and imposed a fine of $50 and costs. It being admitted that the defendant had no distress, he ordered that McFarlane be imprisoned for two months.

Under the Chestnuts.

We stood beneath the chestnuts, beside the river bank;
So still the sparkles swooped and poised, and broke the streamlet dumb;
The sun beyond the purple moors was setting in the west,
With the clouds like vessels round him in gold and crimson drest.
You said the words that made life full of hope and joy to me,
And at our feet Ure shone and gleamed, onrushing to the sea.

I stood beneath the chestnuts, beside the river bank,
And Tees, the robin's vesper songs, as if it hurt me, shrank;
The sun beyond the purple moors was setting in the west;
I thought, as my happiness, with all that life in me lay,
And as you whispered "Be of cheer," no hand held help to me,
And at my feet Ure shone and gleamed, onrushing to the sea.

Ah! still beneath the chestnuts, beside the river bank,
Will other glad young lovers the golden evening thank;
The sun beyond the purple moors sinks glorious to his rest,
And hears the pleading promise made, the trusting love confessed;
And other maidens meet the fate that wrecked my life and me,
While all the while Ure shines and gleams, and rushes to the sea.

MARRYING UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

BY MISS AMELIA THROFF.

James Spooney, vulgarly called by his neighbors Spooney Jim, was the son of a well-to-do farmer in the state of P——. At the time he is introduced to the reader he is in his twenty-eighth year. He had never been very far from home, consequently had seen very little of the world. He was an industrious, harmless young man, whose fortune could never be made by his beauty. He was very tall, thin, and remarkably awkward, with small, dull-looking blue eyes of so pale a hue that they looked as if the color was faded out, abundant red hair, florid complexion, and large, coarse features.

However, there is no accounting for taste, for Jemima Jenkins, the daughter of an adjoining farmer, declared he was "jist the handsumist man she ever cast eyes upon."

Now, James had a great admiration for the fair damsel, who in her personal appearance was as little favored as himself. She was a short, stout, tow-headed girl, with a freckled skin, which looked as if the flies had been sporting with it. The ill-natured in the neighborhood who knew of their courtship, earnestly hoped they might come together in matrimony, arguing that it would be a pity to spoil a good-looking couple with either.

One bright, sunny Sabbath afternoon in mid-summer, as Jim was lying upon the grass in front of the door of his father's house planning for the future, one of the first things that occurred to him was that he should get married.

"Dad's sot on it," he thought, "and so is mam, and I ort tu try and please 'em—it's time. I could rent old Jake Spangler's farm, and the money I've got inter the bank 'll stock it, and Mimie's daddy he'll furnish the house like he did fur Mat Bunn, who married her sistur Sally Ann. I think I'll jist go over to old Jenkins' and ask har—there's nothin' like strikin' while the iron's hot."

Suiting the action to the word he sprang up and started for the house, and neatly attired himself, putting some extra touches to his toilet before starting on his important mission. He looked decidedly gay when he had attired himself in his long gray linen coat, bright red waistcoat, straw hat, with a blue ribbon around it, short, very wide linen pants, and large, heavy shoes. He made fast time as he crossed his father's farm, jumping fences and ditches until he found himself upon Squire Jenkins' land. As he neared the house he beheld his divinity sitting upon a grassy mound, beneath a large willow tree, some little distance from the house.

"Oh, glorious opportunity," thought Jim. "I kin jist settle the matter now, makin' short work on it."

As he approached he felt a slight trembling of the limbs, a nervous sensation, but he made up his mind that he was not going to be frightened from his purpose.

"A gal kin only say no, to du her wust, and there's plenty on 'em if she does. They are jist as thick as blackberries—I kin git another if she's contrary."

Summoning up his courage he shouted:

"Hallo, Mimie! be it you? How does yer be?"

"Fust rate, Jim! how be yer. I am glad yer come, fur I've been lookin' fur yer."

"The purtty critter, she's jist a bustin' with luv' fur me," soliloquised the lover.

"Is yer dog tied up, Mimie?" asked Jim, "fur I'm afeard nv that cuz," looking nervously around. "Tother night as Bill Jones an me was going home frum here, he takes arter us. Bill he runs purtty spry, he has sich big feet he kin git over ground very handy, but jist as he went tu jump over the horse-trough, he tripped, and in he goes. He hollered tu me fur help, but, laws! I jist keeps clear out his way, when the tarnal critter leaves Bill and makes fur me, an' hangs on tu my coat tail with sich a grip that when I managed tu shake him off he had the whole nv my spankin' new coat tail inter his big jaws! Bill he jist stood and laughed fit tu split hisself. He was mad cause he got a duckin'."

"Sakes alive! yer might hev bin kilt," said Jemima. "I'll coax dad tu shoot him."

"Mima," said Jim, anxious to proceed to business, whilst his face became as red as a beet, "I want tu ask yer somethin' perticikler. Yer kin either say yes or no, but course I'd sooner it wus yes. 'Dad wants me ta git married, and so does mam, and I reckon yen'd du jist as well as any one else, so I jist thought I'd ask yer."

Jemima simpered and hung her head—at last she said:

"There's Lydia Ann Blinker yer could git."

"Won't have her, 'cause she's lame."

"Well, Sally Jane Grubb—how du yer like her?"

"She won't du, 'cause she talks through her nose."

"There's Ritbie Simpkins, won't she suit yer?"

"No, she won't, now, 'cause she's blind in one eye."

"Yer jist tu particklaser, Jim!" said Mima, delighted to think he preferred her to all others. "I won't praise any other gal tu yer. You don't want to git married anybow. What's the use of yer foolin'?"

"Did the gal mean tu say no? Lor, women was so queer," he soliloquised, and backed off, alarmed at Mimie's manner, knocking, as he did so, against and upsetting a hornet's nest, which so enraged the inmates that they made a grand attack on him.

"Oh, Jemima! Jemima! Jem!—take 'em off; oh, oh, blazes, oh!" and before she could realise the situation, he rushed by like a flying machine, beating his limbs with his straw hat, his red hair fairly blazing in the sunlight.

There was no time for love or romance with poor Jim now—the situation was principal.

"Bless my stars!" cried the terrified Jemima, "Jim Spooney has jist gone mad. Stop, Jim, stop, fur the land sake stop!"

Not knowing what course to pursue, she stood looking in dismay after her swiftly departing lover. As he attempted to cross a creek he fell in, and some of his vicious enemies found a watery grave, others angrily clung to him. As he mounted a fence, and was about clearing it, an unmannerly bull (doubtless attracted by his red waistcoat) gave him a toss with his horns, sending him far into the meadow beyond. This last shot through the air, rocket-like, was the final view Jemima had of her lover.

There poor James lay for some time, smarting with pain, anger and disappointment. When he reached home, although rid of his enemies, they had left their traces behind them. His head was swelled to twice its size, one eye was entirely closed, whilst his lips were a sight to behold.

"I'll not let Mimie go, I'll hang on, though if she should die, I wouldn't try agin to git another gal. It's too much bother, but I'll be spunky this yer time, see if I don't."

"Yer jist right, Jimmy," said his fond mother, to whom these confidential remarks were made, looking wofully at her spectacle of a son. "Never give up, yer dad didn't when he came a courtin' me, I tell yer, I jist had tu marry him tu git shut uv him. The next time yer go tu see Mimie, don't go 'shamed like through the back yard, but go tu the front uv their house like a man, and ask fur the gal—that's the way big folks do."

So the next time he took his mother's advice, and arranged matters so satisfactorily with Jemima that it is reported they are to be married in the autumn by Squire Bellows.

He took her to a neighboring town to a circus a short time ago, and they were seen indulging in spruce beer and eating ice-cream out of the same dish in a loving manner.

They looked very happy as they walked through the main street hand in hand—and in view of these extravagances, the report of their approaching bliss is probably correct, and Miss Jenkins will be Mrs. Spooney.

Early Portraits of Christ.

Years ago, the writer saw a picture with this inscription: "The only true likeness of our Saviour, taken from one carved on an emerald, by command of Tiberius Cæsar, and given from the treasury of Constantinople by the Emperor of the Turks to Pope Innocent VIII., for the redemption of his brother, taken captive by the Christians."

Further search discovered the same picture associated with different incidents, and led to a study of the pictorial conceptions of our Lord in sacred art.

In the time of Christ superstition had suppressed all pictorial Jewish art even in portraiture, and though skilful and ingenious in all else, no Jew dared to paint a portrait, and no strict one would even allow his own to be painted, for fear of a violation of the second commandment. Portraiture was therefore almost exclusively in the heathen hands and consummate as was Greek art in painting the faces and forms of men, it had small scope in that little Syrian province of the Roman world, where a painter was an outcast.

The first pictures of Christ were probably the work of some of His own disciples, and gradually, as those who loved Him desired to see His face with the eye of sense, the less scrupulous Gnostics, with their ruder form of Greek art, repeated again and again some prototype well known to them, but unknown to us.

Very early in Christian history—as early, indeed, as we have any history outside of the gospels—there was some well-known ideal, and many copies, though varying among themselves, distributed among the oriental churches in Asia and Africa, not always the same in every detail, but so uniform in general that they were distinguished at sight. The earliest known historical mention of such works, though only incidental, is made by Tertullian (born in A. D. 160), who criticises a picture of Jesus as "incorrect," and "wanting in resemblance." This implies that there was a correct type, which a true picture should resemble. Nothing better illustrates the number and antiquity of such pictures than the fact that the earliest ecclesiastical historian, Eusebius, in 340, speaks of them as very plenty, and some of them already very ancient, and associated with traditions of miraculous origin. Augustine, in the next century, speaks of "a variety of numberless pictures," and alludes to some of them as ancient.—W. H. Ingersoll, in Harper's Magazine for May.

REASONS FOR A CHANGE.

In his Chesley speech Hon. Mr. Blake thus tersely summarizes the present political condition of Canada and the necessity of a change in the custodians of the national interests :—

To tell you that we can by passing acts of Parliament make you rich, is what I cannot honestly do, I do not believe it can be done. I did not believe it in 1878 or in 1882. Our task, limited as I have stated it, is yet a very difficult one. The extravagant system adopted, the high permanent charges which have been incurred, the interests which have been created, make it difficult to do what might have been done in 1878 had we continued in power, and even in 1882 had we been successful in winning a verdict from the people But, because it is difficult, it becomes all the more necessary that it should be attempted and that an end should thus be put to the present course of extravagance, incompetence and maladministration. You have a country comparatively embarrassed, a country whose future has been impaired by the maladministration and incompetency of the men in whom you trusted. You have a country whose moral standing is not what it ought to have been, by reason of the scandals to which I have referred, which have disgraced the Legislature and by reflex action, have disgraced the people. But you have a country with great capabilities, with considerable recuperative forces, whose condition may be restored if its people will but recognize and perform their plain and obvious duty.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Hon. E. Blake is summering at Nahant, Massachusetts.

The examination papers set for candidates for teachers' certificates, are so absurdly difficult, as to argue that the examiners have "never been there themselves."

The Toronto Mail justifies the Tory extravagance that has a piled Pelion or Ossa in the shape of Canadian national debt by striving to show that the debt of New Zeland is larger per head. This is something like Jones justifying theft, because he didn't steal as much money as Smith did.

The Tory papers are worrying how to work up a foreign trade for Canada. If you want a man to come to your tea party, don't meet him at the door with a loaded shot gun. If Canada wants to attract foreign traders, it's a poor way to confront him in our ports with a customs cannon charged with a 35 per cent tariff.

The simple "explanation" given of the $4,000 alleged to have been paid members of Parliament, Government supporters, to secure their influence with the Government in condoning customs frauds, does not give the quietus to the scandal. Awkward assertions still continue to crop. The "explanation" was given that the $4,000 paid was only given as a legal fee to Mr. Macmaster, for which, however, it does not appear, he rendered any adequate legal services. Now the Montreal Witness asserts that Mr. Macmaster made an "explanation" to a responsible member of the Gazette staff, different from the other "explanation" published by the Gazette, and upon the latter practically denying it; the Witness says the assertion can be proved, if the "responsible member" of the Gazette staff can be got into the witness box of a court of law, "where 'political exigency' cannot be pleaded for misstatements and denial of facts." There seems to be something in this scandal. The Trade Bulletin boldly made and reiterated the charge that $4,000 was paid to four members of Parliament—two of them Cabinet ministers—for the use of their influence with the Government in obtaining a favorable settlement of the liability arising out of customs frauds. The only denial made is the preposterous "explanation" that the $4,000 were for legal services to be rendered by Mr. Macmaster, whereas, it does not appear that he has rendered legal services to the value of $4. If the accused parties were not afraid of the revelations, a court of law would bring out, and if they were innocent, the Trade Bulletin and Witness would have, ere this, been sued for libel. The belief that crookedness exists is facilitated by the knowledge of how ready members of Parliament who support the Government, are to barter their influence as members for money or money's worth.

Hon. O. Mowat's Illness.

Toronto, July 15.—The statement in a morning paper that Hon. Oliver Mowat was dangerously ill is greatly exaggerated. The Premier has been suffering since last Saturday from a slight attack of colic, but his condition at no time was alarming. Inquiry was made at his residence, on Simcoe street, to-day, when it was found that he was rapidly convalescing and expects to be able to resume his official duties in a few days.

Vancouver Redivius.

Rising from its Ashes.

Mr. Campbell Shaw, of Vancouver, late editor of the Elora Express, writing to his father under date June 22, says: Vancouver which was literally swept out of existence by fire about the middle of June, is undoubtedly the liveliest town in Canada. The amazing progress that city has made since the fire must seem scarcely credible to people in other places. It is being rebuilt almost as rapidly as it was swept away. It is now eight days since our big fire and there are half as many buildings up again as there were 9 days ago. Tons of goods are coming in on every steamer, and waggons are travelling all over the town, heavily laden, from morning to night. The last steamer brought in 150 tons of freight and 82 passengers. There is lots of money and provisions coming in for the poor, and with the contributed money they are furnishing people with working tools and lumber to build. The Knights of Labor have walked all the Chinese out of town, and will let no more come in. The police arrest any man unemployed, for the city is full of toughs who steal and beg and will not work. We expect the C.PyR. through soon, when our already lively town will become doubly so, and our trade receive an impetus that will gladden the hearts of business men.

The Home Rule Problem.

London, July 15.—The Gladstonians have gained the Otley division of Yorkshire.

A feature of the situation is the confidence and courage of the defeated Home Rule party. The victors find themselves face to face with perplexities. The vanquished accept defeat as temporary, and look forward with undiminished hope to future triumph.

Will Gladstone Stick or Resign?

Two questions of the hour are: Will Gladstone resign or face Parliament? And will there be a Conservative or Coalition Ministry to succeed him? Gladstone will, beyond donbt, resign if he consults his own preferences, the opinion of his colleagues and the general wish of the Liberal party. But Parnell is understood to take a contrary view which Labourchere strongly supports. Healey last night urged that the Ministry should remain in office till Chamberlain and Hartington had gone into the lobby with the Tories. There may be tactical advantages in such a course; but the Irish leaders sometimes misunderstand the English feeling as the English misunderstand the Irish feeling. Probably the Daily News expresses the general feeling of the Liberals and of the country in recognizing defeat as decision for the moment, and in expressing the belief that the interests of England, Ireland and the Liberal party would best be served by the resignation of the government as soon as the elections are practically completed.

London, July 14.—The Standard says the Marquis of Salisbury is the natural head of the new government. All Conservatives who prize the triumph which they have won will wish to see the Marquis of Hartington a prominent member of the new government, and will also desire to have the Unionists fairly represented.

Important Information to the Trade.

We have received information from a reliable source that some of the wholesale dealers are endeavoring to injure our brands by representing "that they are not as good as they used to be." This is done for the sole purpose of foisting upon the retailer and the consumer, private and unknown brands, that pay them (the wholesalers) a large profit. It is a well-known and indisputable fact that for the past twenty-five years the reputation and the quality of the justly celebrated and popular brands, Cable, El Padre, and others of our manufacture, have been and always will be maintained, the statements of interested parties to the contrary, notwithstanding. We respectfully beg to impress upon smokers the importance of their insisting upon having our reliable and well known brands, if they desire to avoid smoking cheap trashy cigars, when a little thoughtfulness would have obviated the annoyance and disappointment consequent upon taking whatever is handed to them. Retailers would do well to avoid the persuasive and oratorical jobber, that endeavors to impress upon them the importance of trying private and unknown brands in preference to the Cable and El Padre that have outlived the thousand and I brands that have been introduced since the introduction of the Cable and El Padre. Our (5c) Cable is put up in two sizes, the Concha and Imperial Queen cigar has a narrow red band, with the word Cable on it. None other genuine. Our new brand Madre E Hijo is exceptionally fine and well worth a trial. S. Davis & Sons. Factories, Montreal, Toronto branch, 34 Church street.

A number of the settlers on the Indian reserve at Caughnawagna who were registered to file their claims with the Government for compensation for improvements now refuse to do so. A doubt exists in many minds as to the guilt of the young man Black, of Ottawa, sentenced to imprisonment for life for complicity in an assault on a young woman, and it is said that the manner in which he bears his confinement is creating an absolute conviction of his innocence in the minds of all familiar with the facts and circumstances.

At the St. Thomas Police Court on Tuesday morning, Mary McDermott, charged with being drunk and disorderly, alleged that she was sick, that the doctor prescribed brandy, and that she had taken too much. But Hays retorted, "Save yourselves, ye devils, I'm going ashore." And he went ashore.

A couple of men commenced a fight in front of the residence of a Brantford physician. The medical man objected to the locality selected for the ring, and being engaged in operating a garden hose, he turned the stream on the combatants. The move did not prove to be a wise one, for in a moment one of the pugilists wrested the nozzle from the doctor's hands, turned the stream full upon him, and compelled him to retreat and leave the warriors to continue their fight in peace.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

Out of all that brilliant company, Pauline Darrell was queen. There were men present who would have given anything for one smile from her lips. They admired her, they thought her beautiful beyond comparison, but they did not feel quite at ease with her. She was somewhat beyond them; they did not understand her. She did not blush, and glow, and smile when they said pretty things to her. When they gave her their most brilliant small-talk, she had nothing to give them in return. A soul quite different from theirs looked at them out of her dark, proud eyes. They said to themselves that she was very beautiful, but that she required softening, and that something lovable and tender was wanting in her. She was a queen to be worshiped, an empress to receive all homage, but not a woman to be loved. So they thought who were not even capable of judging such capacity for love as hers.

She was also not popular with the ladies. They thought her very superb; they admired her magnificent dress; but they pronounced her proud and reserved. They said she gave herself airs, that she took no pains to make friends; and they did not anticipate any very great rejoicings when Darrell Court should belong to her. The elder ladies pronounced that judgment on her; the younger ones shrank abashed, and were slightly timid in her presence.

Sir Oswald, it was noticed, led Miss Rochefort in to supper, and seemed to pay her very great attention. Some of the ladies made observations, but others said it was all nonsense; if Sir Oswald had ever intended to marry, he would have married years ago, and his choice would have fallen on a lady of mature age, not on a slight, slender girl. Besides—and who could find an answer to such an argument?—was it not settled that Miss Darrell was to be his heiress? There was no doubt about that.

That baronet's great affection for Aubrey Langton was also known. More than one of the guests present guessed at the arrangement made, and said that in all probability Miss Darrell would marry the captain, and that they would have the Court after Sir Oswald's death.

The banquet was certainly a magnificent one. The guests did full justice to the costly wines, the rare and beautiful fruits, the recherche dishes prepared with so much skill and labor. When supper was ended, the dancers returned to the ballroom, but Miss Darrell was already rather weary of it all.

She stole away during the first dance after supper. The lamps were lighted in the conservatory, and shed a soft, pearly light over the fragrant flowers; the great glass doors at the end were open, and beyond lay the moonlight, soft, sweet, and silvery, steeping the flowers, the trees, and the long grass in its mild light. Without, all was so calm, so still; there was the evening sky with its myriad stars, so calm and so serene; close to the doors stood great sheaves of white lilies, and just inside was a nest of fragrant daphnes and jessamines.

Pauline stood lost in delight; the perfume seemed to float in from the moonlight and infold her. This quiet, holy, tranquil beauty touched her heart as the splendor of the ballroom could not; her soul grew calm and still; she seemed nearer happiness than she had ever been before.

"How beautiful the world is!" she thought. She raised her face, so serenely placid and fair in the moonlight; the silver radiance fell upon it, adding all that was needed to make it perfect, a blended softness and tenderness. The gorgeous, golden-hued dress falling around her, glistened, gleamed, and glowed; her diamonds shone like flames. No artist ever dreamed of a fairer picture than this girl in the midst of the moonlight and the flowers.

Bright fancies thronged her mind. She thought of the time when she should be mistress of that rich domain. No mercenary delight made her heart thrill; it was not the prospect of being rich that delighted her; it was a nobler pride—delight in the grand old home where heroes had lived and died, earnest thoughts of how she would care for it, how she would love it as some living thing when it should be her own.

Her own! Verily her lines were cast in pleasant places! She dreamed great things—of the worthy deeds she would do, of the noble charities she would carry out, the magnificent designs she would bring to maturity when Darrell Court should be hers.

It was not that she wished for it at once. She did not love Sir Oswald—their natures were too antagonistic for that; but she did not wish—indeed, she was incapable of wishing—that his life should be shortened even for one hour. She only remembered that in the course of time this grand inheritance must be hers. How she would help those artist-friends of her father's! What orders she would give them, what pictures she would buy, what encouragement she would give to art and literature! How she would foster genius! How she would befriend the clever and gifted poor ones of the earth!

The beautiful moonlight seemed to grow fairer, the blue, starry heavens nearer, as the grand and gracious possibilities of her life revealed themselves to her. Her heart grew warm, her soul trembled with delight.

And then—then there would be something dearer and fairer than all this—something that comes to every woman—her birthright—something that would complete her life, that would change it, that would make music of every word, and harmony of every action. The time would come when love would find her out, when the fairy prince would wake her from her magic sleep. She was pure and spotless as the white lilies standing near her; the breath of love had never passed over her. There had been no long, idle conversations with young girls on the subject of love and lovers; her heart was a blank page. But there came to her that night, as she stood dreaming her maiden dreams among the flowers, an idea of how she could love, and of what manner of man he would be who should win her love.

Was she like Undine? Were there depths in her heart and soul which could not be reached until love had brought them to light? She felt in herself great capabilities that had never yet been exercised or called into action. Love would complete her life; it would be the sun endowing the flowers with life, warmth, and fragrance.

What manner of man must he be who would wake this soul of hers to perfect life? She had seen no one yet capable of doing so. The mind that mastered hers must be a master-mind; the soul that could bring her soul into subjection must be a grand soul, a just soul, noble and generous.

Ah well, the moonlight was fair, and the flowers were fair. Soon, perhaps, this fair dream of hers might be realized, and——

CHAPTER XVII.

REJECTED.

A shadow came between Pauline and the moonlight, and a quiet voice said:

"Miss Darrell, I am so glad to find you here, and alone!"

Looking up, she saw Aubrey Langton standing by her side. Aubrey's fair, handsome face was flushed, and there was the fragrance of the wine-cup about him, for the gallant captain's courage had failed him, and he had to fortify himself.

He had seen Miss Darrell go into the conservatory, and he understood her well enough to be sure that she had gone thither in search of quiet. Here was his opportunity. He had been saying to himself all day that he must watch for his opportunity. Here it was; yet his courage failed him, and his heart sank; he would have given anything to any one who would have undertaken the task that lay before him. There was so much at stake—not only love, but wealth, fortune, even freedom—there was so much to be won or lost, that he was frightened.

However, as he said to himself, it had to be done. He went back to the dining-room and poured out for himself a tumbler of the baronet's generous old wine, which made his heart glow, and diffused warmth through his whole frame, and then he went on his difficult errand. He walked quietly through the conservatory, and saw Pauline standing at the door.

He was not an artist, he had nothing of the poet about him, but the solemn beauty of that picture did touch him—the soft, sweet moonlight, the sheaves of white lilies, the nest of daphnes, and that most beautiful face raised to the starry sky.

He stood for some minutes in silence; a dim perception of his own unworthiness came over him. Pauline looked as though she stood in a charmed circle, which he almost feared to enter.

Then he went up to her and spoke. She was startled; she had been so completely absorbed in her dreams, and he was the last person on earth with whom she could identify them.

"I hope I have not startled you," he said. "I am so glad to find you here, Miss Darrell. There is something I wish to say to you."

Perhaps that beautiful, calm night-scene had softened her; she turned to him with a smile more gentle than he had ever seen on her face before.

"You want to tell me something—I am ready to listen, Captain Langton. What is it?"

He came nearer to her. The sweet, subtle perfume from the flowers at her breast reached him, the proud face that had always looked proudly on him was near his own.

He came one step nearer still, and then Pauline drew back with a haughty gesture that seemed to scatter the light in her jewels.

"I can hear perfectly well," she said, coldly. "What is it you have to tell me?"

"Pauline, do not be unkind to me. Let me come nearer, where I may kneel at your feet and pray my prayer."

His face flushed, his heart warmed with his words; all the passionate love that he really felt for her woke within him. There was no feigning, no pretence—it was all reality. It was not Darrell Court he was thinking of, but Pauline, peerless, queenly Pauline; and in that moment he felt that he could give his whole life to win her.

"Let me pray my prayer," he repeated; "let me tell how dearly I love you, Pauline—so dearly and so well that if you send me from you my life will be a burden to me, and I shall be the most wretched of men."

She did not look proud or angry, but merely sorry. Her dark eyes drooped, her lips even quivered.

FRIDAY, JULY 16, 1886.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

Musical.

Mr. J. S. Parker will be at his rooms, Lynch's Block, Hunter street, 3rd floor, from August 1st to August 10th, to make arrangements for lessons. He has four vacancies for private pupils.

To be Replanked.

By reference to an advertisement in another column it will be seen that tenders are asked for the replanking of the Otonabee bridge, on Hunter street, between the town and Ashburnham. The replanking of the bridge is a move in the right direction and will supply a if not a want, a necessity.

For all kinds of fine fruit—call at Ostrom's, George street.

Additional Storeroom.

Mr. J. J. McBain has commenced to build a large extension to his grain storehouse on the corner of Charlotte and Aylmer streets. The supports for the addition have been set. The local grain deliveries have increased to such an extent that Mr. McBain has found it necessary to considerably increase the capacity of his storehouse.

Another Pipe Organ.

Mr. E. Lye & Sons, of Toronto, who built the new St. Andrew's church organ, have been awarded the contract for the new pipe organ for the George Street Methodist church, which will be finished and placed in the church some time in October. It will be the most extensive in range of any organ in town.

Boiler Shipment.

The William Hamilton Manufacturing Company have shipped another of their steel steam steamer boilers. This one is sent to the Georgian Bay Consolidated Company for the steamer "Magenetewan" and is 9 x 12 feet. The shell is of 5-16 steel plate and the heads of 5-8 steel and the boiler is of 100 horse power. When a first rate boiler is wanted, steamer owners know where to come.

Scott Act at Bobcaygeon.

Bobcaygeon has had a Scott Act case. James Thompson, kept a Monday pop stand, which the village constable suspected was not built for selling pop only. He searched the place and found three flasks of whiskey, and preferred a charge against Thompson for breach of the Scott Act. The justices before whom the case was tried, considering the evidence sufficient to make a conviction, found the defendant guilty. Thompson was given the alternative of paying $50 or going to jail for thirty days. He preferred the latter and was sent to Lindsay on Wednesday.

Sunday School Pic-nic.

The Charlotte Street Methodist Sunday School pupils, teachers and friends, pic-nicked at Lakefield to-day. A goodly number boarded the train this morning, taking well laden provision baskets, while a number of the excursionists also took canoes along. Owing to the postponement from Wednesday and the recent showers which have thoroughly soaked the ground, and the threatening aspect of the weather, the party was not as numerous as it otherwise would have been. Should the rain keep off, the excursionists are sure to have a pleasant time.

Aids to Sight

The number of persons young and old, whose sight is affected in some form or other is very great, and seems to increase daily. On the other hand it is evident that as nature fails in this respect, science comes to the rescue. The attention of all those who require aids to their sight is called to the fact that Mr. P. H. Morris, the eminent Oculist-Optician, will on Tuesday and Wednesday next, July 20th and 21st visit Mr. John McKee's drug store, George street Peterborough, for the purpose of adjusting the B. Laurance Pebble and other spectacles and eyeglasses, to all who may wish to avail themselves of the opportunity. As Mr. Morris fits these glasses on thoroughly scientific principles, and has a reputation of giving satisfaction in every instance, it behooves every person whose sight is defective to avail themselves of this opportunity of having the most perfect pebble spectacles adjusted to their needs, so as to last many years, and to comfort and strengthen their sight.

Fresh White Fish, Trout and Bass, arriving daily at Ostrom's, George St.

Doing the Town.

The Millbrook lacrosse lads, attired in their club uniforms, were conspicuous around town last night. They were on the war path that leads to Hastings, at which place they will cross sticks with the local team.

St. Andrew's Church.

Come and hear the sweetest toned organ in town, in St. Andrew's Church, on Monday, 19th inst., played by the unexcelled organist, Dr. Davies, of St. James Cathedral, Toronto. Admission only 25c., in aid of the Organ Fund.

Pensioners Pay Day.

To-day was pay day with pensioners of the Imperial Army. Lieut.-Colonel Milligan, Staff Officer of Pensions, was at the Oriental and during the day paid about twenty veterans, there seems blazing more or less with medals, their pensions from the Imperial Government.

The Mutual Reserve.

The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association wants to write $100,000,000 of insurance this year. At least that's what its officers say. Reader, just think of the audacity of this concern. Without one dollar to guarantee the payment of these certificates, we assume that the comparatively trifling sum it has belongs to members already in it) it wants to issue $100,000,000 of them, and it calls them insurance. May the Lord have mercy upon the widows and orphans of the poor mortals who receive these certificates, believing them to be insurance policies.—Vindicator!

Clifton's Church Choir Concerts

The Howard Clifton Church Choir Concert Company gave one of their select concerts in the Lansdowne rink yesterday evening. Admission was free, but a collection was taken up in aid of the Fire Brigade Band uniform fund. Owing to the unfavorable and threatening weather the attendance was not as large as would be expected at a free concert, nor was it as large as the concert merited. There was about five hundred present, the majority of whom were young persons. The gallery of the rink was used as the auditorium. The company, a quartette choir, gave a number of fine selections. Duets and solos of a high order were given by different members of the company. Mr. Howard Clifton's imitations of an organ, violin and bagpipes on a concertina, were especially good. Although the rink is not a good concert hall, the company succeeded in presenting a select entertainment. When it is considered that the performance is in aid of the Band Uniform Fund, there should be an immense audience at the rink this evening, when the admission will be 10c.

—The Lindsay Post says that Councillor Rutherford, of this town, rendered such acceptable services at the recent pic-nic of the George street Methodist Church in the Scugog settlement, that it is proposed to name a stop in the new organ "the Rutherford stop." Our cricket editor suggests that in view of the way Councillor Rutherford remains in office, it should be the "long-stop."

CATARRH CURED—25 YEARS STANDING.

Dr. Washington, Throat and Lung Surgeon, 215 Yonge St., Toronto:

St. Thomas, June 23, 1886.

The Journal.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and as I am now able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat.

Yours truly, W. H. Cox.

Police Court.

A Fuss Over the Breaking of a Cabbage Plant.

George Panton, a slight youth of about seven summers old, was arraigned before Police Magistrate Dumble, this morning, charged by Sam'l Hamilton with wilfully and maliciously injuring his garden. The defendant, his father, and his two brothers and sisters, and Mrs. Johnston, took seats on one side of the court room, while on the other side, Mr. Hamilton, his wife and little boy occupied seats. George Panton, meekly denied the charge when it was read over to him.

Mr. S. Hamilton stated to the court that when he came home on Monday evening, his wife told him that Panton's children had been destroying his cabbage plants. He examined the plants and found several destroyed, while stones were lying around the patch. He complained to Mr. Panton, who refused to chastise his children.

Mrs. Hamilton testified that she saw Geo. Panton throw a stone and break two or three leaves off a cabbage plant in her husband's garden. The boy also threw a stone into their house.

The Magistrate,—Mr Hamilton, you prove by your wife that this boy has broken one cabbage plant; we punish in this court on evidence. What value do you place on the plant.

Mr. Hamilton said there were several plants destroyed, but he did not come to court to get the value of what was destroyed, but to get the boy's father to punish him.

The magistrate said he could not compel the father to do this. He would make Mr. Panton pay the costs of the court, as it was proven that there was some damage done.

Mr. Panton objected and Mrs. Johnston, his housekeeper, was called. She testified that Mrs. Hamilton knew nothing of the occurrence until she told her. She stated that she, when Mr. Hamilton complained to her, assured him that the boy would be punished for what he had done. She also informed the court that Mr. Hamilton's boy was as bad as George Panton.

The magistrate said it was a great pity that they could not live as neighbors without quarrelling, and after exacting a promise from the boys, "never to do it again," dismissed the charge without costs.

Easy Lessons for Examiners.

The absurd and unreasonable difficulty of the papers set for teachers' examinations appears to be receiving universal condemnation. The Globe gives the following satirical list of questions, which afford a fair sample of the unfair questions contained in many of the papers set for candidates at the recently held teachers' examinations:

"Why not invite the authors of the teachers' examination papers to worry a few problems into shape themselves before they are permitted to engage in the annual massacre of candidates for certificates? It could not but prove a wholesome preliminary to the official duties they perform with so much energy and ardour. Why not assail them with a programme like the following for instance:—

"Total number of marks obtainable, 100. Necessary to pass, 50 per cent. Time, two hours.

"(1) Value 12, time 20 minutes."

It takes an examiner 9 months, 4 days, 7 hours and 37 minutes to prepare a double action, lock-spring, patent catch problem, by what rule may the candidate find the solution in 11 minutes, 59½ seconds?

"(2) Value 8, time 15 minutes.

What is the exact profit, Canadian currency, in the pursuit of the fanciful and theoretical as against the sound and practical in educational requirements?

"(3) Value 10, time 15 minutes."

If a skilful stenographer can transcribe his notes at the rate 25 words a minute, what is to prevent a candidate for a certificate, engaged in the solution of a difficult problem, from writing 2,000 words in twelve minutes? Give examples.

"(4.) Value 20, time 20 minutes."

If it could be shown to be fitting that the glorious, pious, and immortal memory of George Washington should be celebrated on the 17th of March, would there still exist historical objections to the observance of the anniversary of American Independence on the 1st of April?

"(5.) Value 15, time 20 minutes."

If x and carry 1 represents the majority of a candidate in an election, by how much would he have been defeated if he had divided his vote with a third candidate.

"(6.) Value 20, time 25 minutes."

If it takes three examiners 6 month 12 days and 14 hours to pluck ten students, what should be the highest quotation for feathers on the 1st of March next?

"(7.) Value 15, time 15 minutes."

Estimate the excess of theoretical examiners over the actual needs of the population.

DON'T YOU THINK SO.

BY MARGARET SYTNGE.

It's all very well to be jolly
When everything's going just right;
When, in summer skies showing no hint of
A shadow, the sun's shining bright;
When around you your merry friends cluster
With many a laugh-bringing jest,
And wherever you turn to discover
The world in its gala robes dressed.
But, ah! 'tis sublime to be jolly
When mirth-loving spirits have fled;
When your path is in gloominess shrouded,
And the tempest bursts over your head;
When fainter hearts beg you to cheer them,
Though your own heart be lonely and drear,
And you scarce can help doubting if ever
The darkness will quite disappear.

The bird that sings sweetly when golden
The earth is and gentle the wind,
When the bees hum their joy o'er the honey
That, hid in the flowers, they find,
When, vying in beauty and fragrance,
Red roses and white lilies grow,
And butterflies, splendid in raiment,
Through their airy realm flit to and fro,
Is a dear little songster; but dearer
Is the bird that its joy-giving strain
Undaunted trills loudly and gayly
In spite of the chill and the rain;
For that to be jolly 'tis easy
In sunshine there isn't a doubt;
But, ah! 'tis sublime to be jolly
When there is naught to be jolly about.

DECORATIVE POSSIBILITIES OF HARDY CLIMBERS.

A charming and picturesque garden is one in which climbers are freely used. We can imagine a most delightful garden where they, in connection with trees and shrubbery alone are used. If we consider their decorative effect, foliage, gracefulness of growth and the great beauty of flowers that many of them have, we must admit they are entitled to a more important place in our gardens. The free use of the Clematis family alone would give a thousand fold more beauty than is obtainable with most lavish use of bedding plants, and we here not only consider the large flowered type, but the smaller flowered sorts as well, with their luxuriance of growth and their charming effect when used as a tree, shrub, hedge or fence drapery. And then the climbing Roses, what a glorious possibility here with their showers of bloom in June. Climbers will not exhibit their charms if trained in a stiff and formal manner; they must, in whatever position used, be allowed to grow untrammelled. My neighbor's garden furnished a good illustration of this. He had planted common Morning Glories all about his porch, with the intention of training them on strings later, but he was diverted from his intention and the Morning Glories were allowed to grow as they would. The effect was most charming; they clambered over every shrub they could reach, shared a trellis with a Clematis, and where they could find nothing more to climb on formed mounds of green of the most tangled and pleasing description. And the Morning Glories, common as they are, if used rightly, produce the most delightful effects. One of the right ways is to sow them among the tall grass, or among low bushes and shrubbery, and as they renew themselves annually from seed, they may be properly considered hardy. For the same purpose the Bind weed (Calystegia Dahurica) is very pleasing.

There is, perhaps, nothing in the world of plant life more lovely than the delicate tracery of low climbing things wedded to the bushes in all northern and temperate regions of the earth. Perishing like the grass, they are contented and safe in the earth in winter. In spring they come up as the buds swell, and finding the bushes once more enjoyable, rush on them as joyously as children from school over a meadow of cowslips; over bush, over brake, on mountain or lowland copse, holding on with delicate but unyielding grasp, they engrave themselves on the mind as the type of grace. In addition to the climbing Pea-flowers, Convolvuluses, etc, of which the stem dies in the winter, we have the wild Grape vines, noble in foliage and often in fruit, the numerous Honeysuckles, from coral red to pale yellow, all beautiful, and the Clematis, rich and varied beyond description, from those of which each petal reminds one of the wing of some huge butterfly to those with small flowers, borne in showers, like drops from a fountain-jet, and often sweet as Hawthorn blossoms.

All to be done is to put in a few plants of any desired kind and leave them alone, adapting the kind to the position. The large, flesh-colored Bindweed, for example, would be best in rough places or in the grass, so that it roots would not be where they could harm, while a delicate, large-flowered Clematis might be placed beneath the choicest specimen Conifer, and allowed to paint its rich green with fair flowers.

Sometimes, when there are large and bare slopes, an excellent effect may be obtained by planting the stouter climbers, such as the wild Grapevines, Clematis Flamula and Honeysuckles, in groups or masses on the grass, away from shrubs or trees; while, where the banks are precipitous and the rocks crop forth, we may allow a curtain of climbers to fall over them.

One of the happiest of all ways of using hardy climbers is that of training them in a free manner over trees. In this way many beautiful effects may be had. In some low trees the graceful companion may garland their heads; in tall ones the stem only may at first be adorned. But some vigorous climbers could, in time, ascend the tallest trees; and there can be nothing more beautiful than a veil of such a one as Clematis Vitalba suspended from the branches of a tall tree.

Some time ago I saw a Weeping Willow on the margin of a lake that had its trunk covered with Virginian Creeper, and the sun shining through the drooping branches of the willow—whose leaves were just becoming tinged with gold—upon the crimson of the creeper-covered trunk was very fine. The Hop is a very effective plant for draping a thin specimen Arbor-vitæ or Yew tree, but its shoots should be thinned out in the spring, and not more than three or four should be allowed to climb up to the tree. When the leader emerges from the top of the bush and throws its long, graceful wreaths of Hops over the dark green foliage, the contrast is most effective. The Wisteria, if planted before its support has become old, will combine with excellent effect with any single specimen of not too dense a habit. The Aristolochia Sypho (Dutchman's Pipe) is another excellent vine for tree drapery, and there is no tree too tall for it, and we need not urge the beauty of the climbing Roses or how greatly their effects will be enhanced if scrambled over low trees.

Another use for hardy climbers is covering the walls of dwelling houses, and if the building be a small cottage or low, old-fashioned house, then almost all the climbers are appropriate, but on the modern brick or frame building there are but few that should be used, and the very best of these is the Ampelopsis Veitchii. It is so good that we think it useless to name any other, as it will quickly cover any surface, brick, stone or wood, with a thick covering of green, which in the fall turns to innumerable shades of crimson, gold and bronzes of indescribable beauty. It holds its foliage until very late in the fall. Last season it was still beautiful in December.

Another climber worthy of special mention is the Aristolochia Sypho; very useful for training on a porch, covering an outbuilding, or for any purpose where a dense screen is desired. Its vigorous growth and the graceful habit of the large heart-shaped leaves (often twelve inches across, lapping over the other, make it, to my mind, the noblest of all the hardy climbers.

Among climbers there is none more hardy than Akebiah Quinata. It is abundantly clothed with dark green leaves, divided into five lobes. The quaintly characteristic tri-lobed flowers are purplish maroon in color, and very fragrant. It is not a noted climber like ivy, so will not cling to a wall unaided; but, given a trellis or a support as a base of operation, it will twine and wreathe itself in every conceivable position. One of the handsomest Akebia plants I have ever seen was twisted into a compact mass some four feet in diameter, and extended to a height of twenty feet, making a perfect pillar of leaves and blossoms.—A Few Flowers Worthy of General Culture.

RUSSIAN MULBERRIES.

The seeds of these mulberries were brought from Russia by the German Russian Menonites about ten years ago. They have been extensively planted in parts of Kansas and Nebraska, and are well adapted to the soil and climate of the United States. They were extensively cultivated in Southern Russia by the Menonites as food for silk worms, they being considered the best for the purpose, making the finest silk. They are quite an acquisition to American gardens, and should be in every collection. The leaves are large and of a beautiful glossy green, making a handsome appearance and dense shade on the lawn. They are extremely hardy and long lived, and survive in drouth where many other trees perish. They bear annually an immense crop of good fruit the size and appearance of a blackberry. There are three kinds, white, black and purple. The black predominates and are the most esteemed. Some trees have the peculiarity of ripening their fruit for over three months. They are very popular with the hogs and hens and are very nice for the children, who can hardly get enough of the goodies. They can be grown thickly in hedges and make the best of wind breaks, and will bear about as much fruit in that way. Fancy hedges can also be made, as they will stand any amount of pruning. They are a very rapid grower, often growing from seven to eight feet in one season. The wood is very tough and as durable for fence posts as red cedar. The pollen mulberry bears no fruit. They are a valuable tree, and when once tried will not be discarded.

Canton, Kan.

EIGHT MILLION DOLLARS A DAY.

Benj. P. Ware's remark in an essay on "Corn Culture," that the corn of this country, during the one hundred days required for its maturity, grows to the extent of $8,000,000 per day, amazes one at first thought. He places the corn crop at 2,000,000,000 bushels, and at an average price as worth $846,000,000. This sum is twice the value of the wheat crop for 1883, three times the value of the cotton crop, and more than ten times the value of the products of the gold and silver mines together.

The pressed fan-like leaves of the not very common Ginkgo or Maiden Hair Tree, are said to be used by New York florists for creating Japanese effects.

The French call tomatoes 'Love Apples" which shows exactly how much they know of the subject. Love is more frequently found in pairs than apples.—Judge.

I knew an old lady who planted some choice Peas and a hen ate them, and she caught the hen, cut open the crop, got the Peas, sewed up the hen's crop, and again planted the Peas. The hen lived and Peas grew.—Cor. Farm Journal.

The smallest bird of America is the humming-bird; and of Europe the golden-crested wren. The smallest quadruped in the world is the pigmy mouse of Siberia. The most diminutive plant is the Arctic raspberry, which is so small that a six-ounce vial will hold the whole, branches, leaves and all.

A handsome costume with its floral adornments is thus described: The material was a peach colored silk with overdress of Canton crepe of the same tint. Pale pink Begonia blossoms, each drooping petal of which seemed frosted with silver, were profusely scattered over corsage and skirt, each bunch being held by a coral branch of that faint rose color, so rare and costly.

TWENTY-SEVEN THOUSAND DOLLARS were received for admissions at Klunder's New York flower show. This is indeed a grand showing, and one that should encourage the craft everywhere. It is another telling comment on the advance of the trade. It is true the exhibit was a grand one, but how recent is that growth of the business which would make such receipts possible even with the most elaborate arrangements.

Horace Greeley, in his best days, said: "Our farmers' sons escape from their calling whenever they can, because it is made a mindless, monotonous drudgery, instead of an ennobling, liberalizing, intellectual pursuit. Could I have known in my youth what a business farming sometimes is, always may be, and yet generally shall be, I would never have sought nor chosen any other." This should be a lesson for the young to learn.

The Poets and Poetry of Canada.

[No. 23]

William Aird Adair.

"The poet is a harp, by wild winds kissed,
Through which the breath of God doth play."
—H. PATERSON.

It is not often we find law and poetry in close affinity. There is, indeed, very little in the atmosphere of a court room or lawyer's office suggestive of the Divine art. Nevertheless a few of the shining lights of Osgoode Hall have found leisure to woo the muse effectually, and some barristers, who are not briefless, have contributed, in no slight degree, to the establishment and growth of a Canadian national literature. Of course, we hold the old saying absolutely true: Poeta nascitur non fit, and so there is no reason why, among the hundreds who yearly tempt fate by striving to eke out a living in law, one poet should not arise among us.

Indeed, one might naturally imagine that from the perusal of dusty tomes of Coke Blackstone and Ontario law reports, the wearied law student would often turn away to refresh his jaded spirits, abjuring "the one party of the first part, whereas, where, fore, hereinbefore mentioned," and all such like barbaric phrases, and like Silas Wegg, be found "dropping into poetry." And then, catching the divine afflatus, (easier perhaps than finding clients) we could imagine him, instead of preparing a "case," or providing material to overthrow the testimony of a witness in a Scott Act trial, taking up his quill to write a sonnet or giving vent to his feelings against all non-litigants in quaint, but fanciful "thoughts that breathe and words that burn," ycleept the art poetic. Nor is leisure wanting. Five hours work per day, for two long months. Ye gods! what might not a true poet make of this? Well, youthful aspirants for the Bar and Bench take up the suggestion herein unfolded, come forth with tale and verse, do something for the honour of Canadian literature and we will actually forego this usual charge for advice and counsel which you all so well know how to make?

Mr. William Aird Adair, is a post of Canadian extraction and a barrister to boot? He was born in the town of St. Mary's, Perth County, on the 10th of April, 1860, of Scottish parents, his father being a native of Wigtonshire, and his mother of Invergordon, in Rossshire.

At a very early period in his career, he showed a taste for all things Scottish and actually before he knew his letters, he could repeat many Doric ballads and understood many traditions of the land beyond the sea. As he advanced in years he devoured greedily all works that came in his way, or that he could procure, which treated of Scottish legends or poetry and was quite an authority even among his elders, on all matters concerning ghaists, kelpies, second sight and such like "uncanny" creatures.

Mr. Adair was educated in the Collegiate Institute, St. Mary's, and at the age of 16, he entered a lawyer's office. Here his genius for poetry became developed and, before he had passed his final examination for barrister, several of his pieces had been published.

He has written a good many excellent poems, chiefly in the Scottish dialect, and these first saw the light in the Weekly Despatch, England, and in the Scottish-American Journal, New York. In the latter paper his effusions appear chiefly under the nom de plume of "Stranraer," and for the last three years his pen has been very active, his poems and tales showing decided advancement. To his taste for rhyme, he has added a very strong predilection for Scottish ballads and music, and we believe he is the fortunate possessor of the best collection of Scottish music in Canada. We trust Mr. Adair will continue to cultivate the muse. He is capable of better work than any that has yet fallen from his pen, and we have no doubt by study, painstaking, diligence and care, he will yet achieve a high place in our national literature. Mr. Adair is now associated in partnership with Geo. Moncrieff, Esq., barrister of Petrolia, and we have to thank him for kindly acceding to our request to furnish us with some details of his career. We wish him success and trust some of our local lawyers will "go and do likewise."

Hon. Mr. Mowat.

TORONTO, July 16th.—Attorney-General Mowat is reported quite convalescent after his recent sharp attack of sickness, but it is unlikely that he will take any further part in addressing Liberal meetings for some time to come. When he was prostrated he was on the eve of starting for the Adirondacks, where Mrs. Mowat is at present sojourning.

The Emerald Isle.

(Written for the EXAMINER.)

Near the western coast of Europe, where Atlantic billows leap
With a murmur everlasting, springs an island from the deep,
Where the tourist ever lingers, for all nature loves to smile
On the mountains and the valleys, of the glowing Emerald Isle.

By her lovely lakes and rivers, for long centuries had dwelt,
Happy in his independence, the unubjugated Celt.
And to Erin's halls of learning, for the wisdom she'd bestow
Come the youth of every nation, in the ages long ago.

But upon this fair and fertile land, was scatter'd discord's seed,
And 'mid patriotic flowers, grew the evil traitor weed
For the rebel King of Leinster, fleeing for his worthless life,
Sought the aid of English Strongbow, in this matricidal strife.

And the English came and conquered, Norman spear and Saxon bow,
Bearing back Hibernia's swordsmen, laid the might of Erin low,
Crushed and beaten were the Irish, down the Emerald banner fell,
And the Celtic harp was silent, after sounding freedom's knell.

And the victors knew not mercy, be it said to their disgrace
'Neath the heel of grim oppression, did they grind the conquer'd race,
With a hatred unrelenting, till the Celtic spirit broke
And the Irish once so haughty, bowed them tamely to the yoke.

None dare worship at the altars where of old their fathers knelt,
From their shrines, like wild beasts hunted, 'mongst the hills their priesthood dwelt,
Banished likewise were their teachers, 'twas a crime to teach the young—
To recite the lessons written, in the dear old mother tongue

Not a Celt could be a doctor, none of them dare study law.
(Lest, perhaps, they might discover in the statutes any flaw.)
Banished from their country's council, disenfranchised were they all,
Forced to be mere beasts of burden, at their master's beck and call.

When the foulest persecution caused the Irish to rebel,
When for mercy, faith and justice, men like Emmets fought and fell.
Useless were their strongest efforts, vainly ran their blood and tears,
Overflow'd their cup of sorrow, during seven hundred years.

Till at last great Dan. O'Connell, conquer'd where the sword had failed,
When in language, sternly righteous, he the despot's might assail'd,
At his head in old St. Stephen's, fierce denunciations hurled,
Till the wrongs of trampled Erin echoed thro the Christian world.

Then her chains began to loosen, then within the Irish breast
Glowed again the spark of freedom, thro' long centuries suppress'd,
Growing brighter—more refulgent—soon, God grant, its dazzling flame
May to each and every nation, Erin's happiness proclaim!

Oh Britannia! ever just to others, be to Erin just,
Give her back her share of freedom, give it freely, ere you must
From her callous'd limbs, in mercy, strike each bond that yet remains,
And instead of iron fetters, bind her fast with silken chains!

Oh my brothers! ever generous, children of the Maple Leaf,
Stretch a helping hand to Erin, strive to make her bondage brief,
Speed the progress, share the glory, of that army, in whose van,
Strides the sage and hoary statesman, Scotland's pride, the Grand Old Man!

And when Home Rule is triumphant, when the victory's complete,
That you've done your duty nobly, you'll enjoy conviction sweet,
Gratitude you'll win from bosoms, that for centuries will swell,
At the name of William Gladstone, and his colleague, Charles Parnell.

FRITZ FRY.

Peterborough, July 15th, 1886.

The British Elections.

LONDON, July 16.—The Tories are in a minority of 26 with only twenty seats to hear from, which latter will increase the minority. The latest returns received total as follows:—

Conservatives	312
Liberal Unionists	76
Gladstonians	182
Parnellites	81

Influenced by this result Lord Salisbury has offered to give the Liberal Unionists four seats in the cabinet and an equal ratio of the lesser offices. He will permit Lord Hartington to be leader in the House of Commons, and to select what office he chooses, excepting that of premier. Lord Salisbury proposes to again unite the premiership with the office of foreign secretary. The Conservative newspapers predict that the first fight will arise over obstructive tactics by the Gladstonians and Parnellites. The ministerial circles deny the charge and affirm that Mr. Gladstone is desirous of extending the however of cloture. Mr. Parnell is disposed to follow the lead of Mr. Gladstone, but Lord Salisbury proposes coercion. Every means will be resorted to to protract opposition.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY MERTHA M CLAY

"You love me," she rejoined—"really love me, Captain Langton?"

He interrupted her.

"I loved you the first moment that I saw you. I have admired others, but I have seen none like you. All the deep, passionate love of my heart has gone out to you; and, if you throw it from you, Pauline, I shall die."

"I am very sorry," she murmured gently.

"Nay, not sorry. Why should you be sorry? You would not take a man's life, and hold it in the hollow of your hand, only to fling it away. You may have richer lovers, you may have titles and wealth offered to you, but you will never have a love truer or deeper than mine."

There was a ring of truth about his words, and they haunted her.

"I know I am unworthy of you. If I were a crowned king, and you, my peerless Pauline, the humblest peasant, I should choose you from the whole world to be my wife. But I am only a soldier—a poor soldier. I have but one treasure, and that I offer to you—the deepest, truest love of my heart. I would that I were a king, and could woo you more worthily."

She looked up quickly—his eyes were drinking in the beauty of her face; but there was something in them from which she shrank without knowing why. She would have spoken, but he went on, quickly:

"Only grant my prayer, Pauline—promise to be my wife—promise to love me—and I will live only for you. I will give you my heart, my thoughts, my life. I will take you to bright sunny lands, and will show you all that the earth holds beautiful and fair. You shall be my queen, and I will be your humblest slave."

His voice died away in a great tearless sob—he loved her so dearly, and there was so much at stake. She looked at him with infinite pity in her dark eyes. He had said all that he could think of; he had wooed her as eloquently as he was able; he had done his best, and now he waited for some word from her.

There were tenderness, pity, and surprise in her musical voice as she spoke to him.

"I am so sorry, Captain Langton. I never thought you loved me so well. I never dreamed that you had placed all your heart in your love."

"I have," he affirmed. "I have been reckless; I have thrown hope, love, manhood, life, all at your feet together. If you trample ruthlessly on them, Pauline, you will drive me to desperation and despair."

"I do not trample on them," she said, gently; "I would not wrong you so. I take them up in my hands and restore them to you, thanking you for the gift."

"What do you mean, Pauline?" he asked, while the flush died from his face.

"I mean," she replied, softly, "that I thank you for the gift you have offered me, but that I cannot accept it. I cannot be your wife, for I do not love you."

He stood for some minutes dazed by the heavy blow; he had taken hope from her gentle manner, and the disappointment was almost greater than he could bear.

"It gives me much pain to say this," she continued, "as it gives you to hear it; pray believe that."

"I cannot bear it!" he cried. "I will not bear it! I will not believe it! It is my life I ask from you, Pauline—my life! You cannot send me from you to die in despair!"

His anguish was real, not feigned. Love, life, liberty, all were at stake. He knelt at her feet; he covered her white, jeweled hands with kisses and with hot, passionate tears. Her keen womanly instinct told her there was no feigning in the deep, broken sob that rose to his lips.

"It is my life!" he repeated. "If you send me from you, Pauline, I shall be a desperate, wicked man."

"You should not be so," she remarked, gently; "a great love, even if it be unfortunate, should ennoble a man, not make him wicked."

"Pauline," he entreated, "you must unsay those words. Think that you might learn to love me in time. I will be patient—I will wait long years for you—I will do anything to win you; only give me some hope that in time to come you will be mine."

"I cannot," she said; "it would be so false. I could never love you, Captain Langton."

He raised his face to hers.

"Will you tell me why? You do not reject me because I am poor—you are too noble to care for wealth. It is not because I am a soldier, with nothing to offer you but a loving heart. It is not for these things. Why do you reject me, Pauline?"

"No, you are right; it is not for any of those reasons; they would never prevent my being your wife if I loved you."

"Then why can you not love me?" he persisted.

"For many reasons. You are not at all the style of man I could love. How can you doubt me? Here you are wooing me, asking me to be your wife, offering me your love, and my hand does not tremble, my heart does not beat; your words give me no pleasure, only pain; I am conscious of nothing but a wish to end the interview. This is not love, is it, Captain Langton?"

"But in time," he pleaded—"could you not learn to care for me in time?"

"No, I am quite sure. You must not think I speak to pain you, but indeed you are the last man living with whom I could fall in love, or whom I could marry. If you were, as you say, a king, and came to me with a crown to offer, it would make no difference. It is better, as I am sure you will agree, to speak plainly."

Even in the moonlight she saw how white his face had grown, and what a sudden shadow of despair had come into his eyes. He stood silent for some minutes.

"You have unmanned me," he said, slowly. "But, Pauline, there is something else for you to hear. You must listen to me for your own sake," he added; and then Aubrey Langton's face changed, his lips grew dry and red, his breath came in short quick gasps—he had played a manly part, but now he felt that what he had to say would sound like a threat.

He did not know how to begin, and she was looking at him with those dark, calm eyes of hers, with that new light of pity on her face.

"Pauline," he said, hoarsely, "Sir Oswald wishes for this marriage. Oh, spare me—love me—be mine, because of the great love I bear you!"

"I cannot," she returned; "in my eyes it is a crime to marry without love. What you have to say of Sir Oswald my quickly."

"But you will hate me for it," he said.

"No, I will not be so unjust as to blame you for Sir Oswald's fault."

"He wishes me to marry; he is not only willing, but it would give him more pleasure than anything on earth; and he says—do not blame me, Pauline—that if you consent he will make you mistress of Darrell Court and all his rich revenues."

She laughed—the pity died from her face, the proud, hard expression came back.

"He must do that in any case," she said, haughtily. "I am a Darrell; he would not dare pass me by."

"Let me speak frankly to you, Pauline, for your own sake—your own sake, dear, as well as mine. You are—he is not so bound. Although the Darrell property has always descended from father to son, the entail was destroyed fifty years ago, and Sir Oswald is free to leave his property to whom he likes. There is only one imperative condition—whoever takes it must take with it the name of Darrell. Sir Oswald told me that much himself."

"But he would not dare pass me—a Darrell—by, and leave it to a stranger."

"Perhaps not; but honestly, Pauline, he told me that you were eccentric—I know that you are adorable—and that he would not dare to leave Darrell Court to you unless you were married to some one in whom he felt confidence—and that some one, Pauline, is your humble slave here, who adores you. Listen, dear—I have not finished. He said nothing about leaving the Court to a stranger; but he implied that unless we were married he himself should marry."

She laughed mockingly.

"I do not believe it," she said. "If he had intended to marry, he would have done so years ago. That is merely a threat to frighten me; but I am not to be frightened. No Darrell was ever a coward—will not be coerced. Even if I liked you, Captain Langton, I would not marry you after that threat."

He was growing desperate now. Great drops stood on his brow—his lips were so hot and tremulous that he could hardly move them.

"Be reasonable, Pauline. Sir Oswald meant what he said. He will most certainly marry, and, when you see yourself deprived of this rich inheritance, you will hate your folly—hate and detest it."

"I would not purchase twenty Darrell Courts at the price of marrying a man I do not like," she said, proudly.

"You think it an idle threat—it is not so. Sir Oswald meant it in all truth. Oh, Pauline, love, riches, position, wealth, honor—all lie before you; will you willfully reject them?"

"I should consider it dishonor to marry for the sake of winning Darrell Court, and I will not do it. It will be mine without that; and if not, I would rather a thousand times go without it than pay the price named, and you may tell Sir Oswald so."

There was no more pity—no more tenderness in the beautiful face. It was all aglow with scorn, lighted with pride, flushed with contempt. The spell of the sweet moonlight was broken—the Darrell spirit was aroused—the fiery Darrell pride was all ablaze.

He felt angry enough to leave her at that moment and never look upon her again; but his position was so terrible, and he had so much at stake. He humbled himself again and again—he entreated her in such wild passionate tones as must have touched one less proud.

"I am a desperate man, Pauline," he cried at last; "and I pray you, for Heaven's sake do not drive me to despair."

But no words of his had power to move her; there was nothing but scorn in the beautiful face, nothing but scorn in the willful, passionate heart.

"Sir Oswald should have known better than to use threats to a Darrell!" she said, with a flash of her dark eyes; and not the least impression could Aubrey Langton make upon her.

Mr. J. S. Parker will be at his rooms, Lynch's Block, Hunter street, 3rd floor, from August 1st to August 10th, to make arrangements for lessons. He has four vacancies for private pupils.

Clifton's Concert.

The Howard Clifton Church Choir Concert Company gave a second performance in the Lansdowne rink last night. The audience only numbered about three hundred, although the price of admission was placed at 10c. The performance in point of meirit was equal to that of the previous evening. The Fire Brigade Band uniform fund was augmented by a part of the proceeds.

For all kinds of fine fruit—call at Ostrom's, George street.

Raising Roo.

There was an unusual stir at the "Golden Lion" this morning, over the raising to the second flat of four monster rolls of English body oilcloth. These rolls varied in length from 12 to 24 feet and weighed hundreds of pounds. Mr. W. H. Roberts manipulated the block and tackle, and succeeded in hauling the rolls up the front of the building and in at a second story window. The oilcloths are said to be a particularly fine lot.

Novel Bathing Box.

Mr. W. English is evidently determined that his children shall enjoy the privileges of a safe and spacious bath, and has built for their use an ingenious and novel bath. It is box shaped, thirty feet long, by nine feet wide and four feet deep. The "bathing house" as it is called, will be securely moored to a large boom in the river, near the shore, at the rear of Mr. English's house. It will be so fixed that the bathers will be able to raise or lower the box to suit their requirements. The bath will not be covered and is only made with a view to safety and solid comfort, which no doubt it will afford.

Aquatic Accident.

During the progress of the aquatic sports held by the Charlotte street Methodist Sunday School at Lakefield yesterday, an exciting accident occurred which considerably dampened two persons. Two young ladies who were paddling out to the starting place to take part in the ladies' canoe race, accidently ran into the canoe of two river drivers who persisted in running across their bow, upsetting the drivers' craft, and, of course, plumping them in the river. A series of screams announced the mishap. Of course, both men could swim, and easily managed to get ashore.

Aids to Sight

The number of persons young and old, whose sight is affected in some form or other is very great, and seems to increase daily. On the other hand it is evident that as nature fails in this respect, science comes to the rescue. The attention of all those who require aids to their sight is called to the fact that Mr. P. H. Morris, the eminent Oculist-Optician, will on Tuesday and Wednesday next, July 20th and 21st visit Mr. John McKee's drug store, George street Peterborough, for the purpose of adjusting the B. Laurance Pebble and other spectacles and eyeglasses, to all who may wish to avail themselves of the opportunity. As Mr. Morris fits these glasses on thoroughly scientific principles, and has a reputation of giving satisfaction in every instance, it behooves every person whose sight is defective to avail themselves of this opportunity of having the most perfect pebble spectacles adjusted to their needs, so as to last many years, and to comfort and strengthen their sight.

Mr. H. Wallis, of Montreal, Mechanical Superintendent of the G. T. R., passed through town to-day in his private car on a tour of inspection.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ball, of Brooklyn, are in town on a visit with friends. Mr. Ball thinks that Peterborough is rapidly coming to the front and becoming more Americanized. The boulevarding and tree planting, together with the beautiful Court House Park are some of the noticed improvements.

Mr. Michael Sheehan, brother-in-law of Mr. Thomas Cahill, now of Michigan, is on a visit to town. He has been prospecting on the north shore of Lake Superior, among the timber districts of that region, in the interests of a Michigan firm, and took occasion of his outing to visit his old home and renew old associations. He reports large quantities of good timber, though difficult of access, which the Americans are anxious to get.

Little Lake Cemetery.

Important Improvements Being Made in the Grounds of the Silent City—How the Work is Progressing.

Every year it has been the pleasure of THE EXAMINER to note the condition and improvement made in this beautiful resting place of the dead. There were, however, confined to extensions at the cultivated portion, within the old enclosure. This year a quite different work is going on. Mr. Kelly is successfully carrying out the improvement of the several acres added to the cemetery on the western side and bringing it into correspondence with the old improved portion.

One who has not visited the cemetery before this year would on approaching it. The entrance gates and circular fence have been removed to the new western boundary at the roadway. The fence has been newly painted and so well has it been done that only a connoisseur could distinguish it from a new fence. Southward from this extends to the southern limit of the grounds a neat new fence of light iron and wood. This fence, which is 1695 feet in length is neatly painted, the iron work, a bright green and the wood a neutral tint.

From the site of the entrance gates along the left of the entrance drive, a cedar hedge put down this spring, has been planted. This extends three hundred feet, following at the upper end the curve of the old circular fence at the old entrance and terminating where it did. From this point this year's improvements may be noted. From here to the southern boundary extends a broad drive, marking the dividing line between the old and new parts. To the left of this going southward to the new central drive, the bank been converted into

A TERRACE FOR VAULTS.

Above and east of this portion, the undergrowth of thicket on the western boundary of the old cemetery grounds has been cleared away and the ground neatly graded, the best trees being left standing. From this terrace about the highest part of the cemetery, the view overlooks the new portion, producing a very fine effect.

The new part of the cemetery in its natural condition presented great difficulties of treatment, but Mr. Ramsey and Mr. Kelly, co-operating with the directors, have overcome them. To the right of the entrance gates a broad plateau sweeps southward on level lines about three hundred feet, rising, however, gradually towards the old grounds. This portion is not yet quite levelled. A deep hollow had to be filled up, which required a large amount of earth, but so skillfully has Mr. Kelly used his materials that the work will be done by borrowing earth from other parts of the grounds without hauling any from the outside. From where the level space ends the slope of the hills will be broken by terraces, as the nature of the ground may require. Along the western limit of the grounds a level space, about a hundred feet wide is made at the foot of the slope, to be planted on the outside with a row of trees, and flanked by a drive.

THE SYSTEM OF DRIVES

in the new portion consists, first, of the dividing drive before mentioned. From the northern beginning of this, a broad drive sweeps diagonally downward to about the middle of the new grounds. It then runs directly south, broken by a large turning circle, terminating in a diamond which forms the intersecting point with the drive that leads from the minor entrance gate about the middle of the western boundary. This drive runs due east till it joins the main drive in the southern part of the old grounds. From the main entrance gates a drive extends along the western boundary fence, all around the new grounds, and at the junction of the old ground sweep under the base of the hill till it joins the existing drive at the lower fountain, east of the mortuary chapel.

AN IMMENSE AMOUNT of work has been done, but as much of this is out of sight, it would appear to a superficial observer that very great progress had not been made. The new grounds have been thoroughly underdrained, about 1100 feet of 4 inch tile and 1160 feet of six inch tile have been put in at a depth of from four to five feet, besides no small extent of stone drain. This represents a large amount of work, not a particle of which is visible. The work has been well done. Mr. Kelly, when felling the pines, saved the small boughs and placed them on the top of the tiles before filling in, thus preventing choking by the earth.

At present the work of grading and levelling is going on, six men and two teams being employed. Under Mr. John Kelly's supervision, the work is progressing satisfactorily.

The directors are fortunate in securing the services of so efficient a Superintendent. Mr. Kelly, to a full knowledge of the business, gained by a long experience, joins a a good taste, a ready appreciation of the best means to be employed to produce the best effects, and a ready disposition to hard work.

Early this fall the work of grading and levelling will be finished, the walks and drives largely completed and the new lawns laid down to grass.

In appearance the improvement will be a vast one and also result in a large addition to the interring capacity of the cemetery. The new portion will furnish space for 1000 full lots and the extension of the older portion will increase the number to 1,500, besides space for vaults.

CRESCENT STREET.

In addition to other work, two hundred feet of cribbing has been placed to assist in preventing the total destruction of Crescent street by the action of the water of the lake. It is unfortunate that the corporation of the town should not make some effort to improve this approach to our beautiful cemetery. The street is becoming rapidly narrower every year, and, unless something is done soon, it will be too narrow for carriage use. The preservation of this street need not be very expensive. With the cribbing once in place, sufficient earth is on hand for filling. From Mr. Harry Winch's residence to the cemetery gates, the whole width of the road could be lowered a foot, thus furnishing sufficient material for filling. If the street were cribbed and levelled, the Cemetery Company would see that a line, or lines, of trees was planted. A sidewalk is another pressing necessity. At present, ladies who wish to visit the cemetery on foot, have to either wade through mud or dust, a circumstance which spoils their clothing and inspires the unamiable wish that they were on the way to visit the graves of members of the Town Council, who permit, what might be made a beautiful avenue, to remain in a worse condition than a country road.

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 25th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 20 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, aiding others, recently, two springless trusses made in York State, costing me $40. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KING.

St. Thomas, June 23, 1886.

THE JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and as I am now able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat,

Yours truly, W. H. COX.

Police Court.

The hearing of the charge against R. N. Roddy, of unlawfully selling liquor between the 31st of May and 6th of July, was continued at the police court this morning.

R. N. Roddy was sworn and testified, that he recognized the lease produced by Mr. Moore, made by himself to Wm. Reynolds, by which he leased the bar and fixtures to Reynolds for one year, from the 17th of May, at $5 per day. The terms of the lease had since been carried out. Reynolds generally paid him every night, and had entire control of the bar. He, Roddy, had not sold any liquor between the 31st of May and 6th of July.

To Mr. Edwards,—The lease was made on May 17th, but was not signed till some time afterwards. It was about a month afterwards that Reynolds signed the lease—a day or two before he, Roddy, was up for assaulting Sanders. He arranged verbally with Reynolds that he should pay $5 per day for the bar, subject to a week's notice on either side. He helped Reynolds during the first week both to sell and buy. He did not produce this lease when charged with selling liquor between May 1st and 27th because it was not signed, and also for other reasons.

Reynolds paid him $5 a day—Sundays included. Reynolds might sell cigars and soda water on Sunday. Reynolds got his meals at the hotel but did not pay for them. While Reynolds was at dinner he sometimes looked the bar, or he, (Roddy,) watched it. He might have sold a drink of soda water or cigars. He did not take the money for these. He might have taken money for a cigar and handed it to Reynolds. He had to be very careful, as these temperance people, who were always up to such tricks, might lay an information against him. His boarders were afraid to come and take their meals for fear they might be subpœnaed to give evidence against him for selling liquor.

To Mr. Moore the witness stated, Reynolds paid him at the rate of $5 per day for every day in the week. He did not charge Reynolds for board because he helped him around the house on different occasions.

Mr. Moore appeared for Mr. Roddy and Mr Edwards for the prosecution.

The magistrate reserved judgment till to-morrow.

Cobourg's Clerk Cramped

While Bathing in Lake Ontario—Found Unconscious on the Sand.

A telegraphic despatch announces that Mr. W. H. Floyd, of Cobourg, who went to the lake to bathe on Saturday evening, was found by his wife shortly afterward, lying partly in the sand unconscious. It is supposed he took a cramp and succeeded in reaching the shore before being overcome. Doctors did all that medical skill can do, but at a late hour last night he had not regained consciousness. He is a valuable citizen, holding at present the position of clerk of the town, secretary of the police commissioners, clerk of the Police Court, paymaster of the 40th Battalion and a high position in the Masons.

A Four-fold Murderer at Sixteen.

The trial of Willie Sells, a lad 16 years of age, for the murder of his father, mother, brother and sister, last March, began at Erie, this State, on Monday. A hatchet and butcher knife were the weapons used. It is said that the inhuman boy was an inveterate reader of dime novels and had several times expressed a desire to become a hero.

—Mayor Harper, police magistrate of Whitby, has been appointed police magistrate of the Township of Pickering and West Whitby, Ontario County.

—Street Inspector Wilson has begun his began his weed harvest on the streets. The crop is a good one. The burdock (Lappa Major, Carpenter) is as tall as a fisherman's yarn.

Accident to an Inebriated Indian.

A Grand Junction Train Amputates His Right Arm While he Sleeps at the Side of the Track.

Another railway accident occurred on Saturday night, by which an Indian named Alexander Comego lost an arm. As the evening express train on the Grand Junction which arrives here at 7.45, was running between Hastings and Birdsall it encountered Comego, who was lying on the side of the track with his right arm thrown across the rail beside him. The train was going at a rapid rate around a slight curve at a point where lumber line the track on either side, and the driver, Wm. Pillan, did not see the man until he was almost upon him. He whistled down brakes, but the train did not stop till the unfortunate Indian had been left some distance behind. The train was backed up near to where the accident occurred.

The conductor and a number of others went to the prostrate man, and found that his right arm had been cut off a little above the elbow. He was almost unconscious at the time, and was carried to one of the coaches, where Dr. Shaw of Keene, who was on board, applied a compress and dressed the wound extemporarily. Conductor Morris, with a thoughtfulness which characterizes him, sent a telegram to Mr. Brandrette, station agent here, to prepare to receive the disarmed Indian. Mr. Brandrette sent for Dr. Pigeon who immediately went to the station. On arriving here the Indian was conveyed to the Nicholls hospital, where preparations had been made to receive him. Dr. Fife, attending physician, Dr. Pigeon and Dr. Boucher accompanied him to the hospital. They examined the remains of the injured limb, and found that it would be necessary to make it still shorter, the bone being crushed, and the flesh bruised and lacerated. The sufferer was put under the influence of chloroform, when Dr. Fife, assisted by the others, performed the operation of amputating the arm, four or five inches from the shoulder. Since the operation the patient has slept well, and as he is blessed with a robust constitution, no doubt will speedily recover.

Comego, who belongs to Allanwick, had been in Hastings during Saturday, where, according to his own story, he in company with a companion, had been drinking "blue ribbon beer." They started to walk to Birdsall where they had been working. They separated, where, Comego does not know. He says he must have gone to sleep where the engine found him, shortly after his companion left him. He suffered great pain, which he bore with the stoicism peculiar to his race. He is now doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

Peterborough in the Rockies.

A Hamlet Among the Mountains Named After Our Town.

NEW PETERBOROUGH, July 12th, 1886.

To the Editor of the EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—Thinking it might interest your many readers to hear from the Rocky Mountains, there being a large number of young men from Peterborough town and county out here, I have taken the liberty of writing to you. About thirty miles from Selkirk, the summit of the Selkirk range, on the banks of the Ill-acille-waet river, a tributary of the Columbia, stands a romantically situated hamlet. On approaching this settlement from the east the first thing that attracts the eye is a post which supports a sign bearing the name of the place, "Peterborough," New Peterborough, British Columbia. Although the settlement is not as vigorous as its eastern namesake, yet it is a "chip off the old block." About the 1st of June Messrs. McDermid & Ross, commenced to build their saw mill, at this place, which now completed, is the chief industry of the settlement. It has a capacity of 35,000 feet per ten hours and runs two shifts, night and day. It was made and put up by the Waterous Company. On the left hand side of the track is the carpenter's shop, which is under the management of Mr. Robert Jameson, who looks natural enough at his work, and one would not suppose he was so far away from his native place.

FAMILIAR FACES.

I was standing in the shop watching Mr. Jameson, who is making sleds on which to pull the logs into the mill, when my eye was attracted by a familar looking face. It was that of "Billy" Cook, who is sawyer in the mill. He looks well and hearty and is just as stout as ever, the recent hot weather which we have had, as high as 125°, seeming to have no effect upon him. Another familiar face which I met shortly after, was that of Mr. J. Barr, the genial foreman of the mill. Mr. Barr took me down to see Mr. Duggan, of Lindsay, who is walking boss for the firm. After having dinner with these worthies, I met a young man, attired in buckskin coat and leggings, moccasins, a broad brimmed felt hat, and a broad belt around his waist, the over which Oscar Wilde waxed poetic. It was Mordem Kincaid. He is much changed and is the only one of the Peterborough boys I have seen who has become naturalized. The boys all call him "Doc," as he carries his "doctor shop" with him. He is doing well and looks "immense."

THE GOLD FEVER.

Some of the boys have taken the "gold fever" or mining craze and go up the mountains with picks and shovels to find the glittering gold, but as yet they have all been unsuccessful.

There are sixty men here and Mr. Duggan expects more to-morrow. There is now no sickness of any account, although we had two cases of smallpox. The patients were well attended and every precaution was taken by the doctors to prevent a spread of the disease, which they were successful in doing, as no more cases have broken out.

Hoping to be home in the fall,
I remain,
ONE OF THE BOYS.

THE VILLAGE CHOIR.

Half a bar, half a bar,
Half a bar onward!
Into an awful ditch
Choir and Precentor hitch,
Into a mass of pitch,
They led the 119th Hundred.
Treble to right of them,
Tenors to left of them,
Bass in front of them,
Belgered and thundered.
Oh! that Precentor's look,
When the soprano took
Their own time and hook.

Screeched all the trebles here,
Boggled the tenors there,
Raising the parson's hair,
While his mind wandered!
Theirs not to reason why—
Tale psalm was pitched too high;
Theirs but to grate and cry—
Cut the Old Hundred.
Treble to right of them,
Tenors to left of them,
Basses in front of them,
Hallooed and thundered,
Stormed they with shout and yell,
Not wise they sang, nor well,
Drowning the sexton's bell,
While all the church wondered.

Dire the Precentor's glare,
Flash'd his pitch-fork in air,
Sounding fresh keys to bear
Out the Old Hundred.
Swiftly he turned his back,
Snatch'd he his hat from rack,
Then from the screaming pack
Himself he sundered.
Tenors to right of him,
Trebles to left of him,
Discords behind him,
Bellowed and thundered.
Oh, the wild howls they wrought!
Right to the end they fought!
Some time they sang, but not—
Not the Old Hundred.

Vancouver Again in Ashes.

VICTORIA, B.C., July 17.—It is reported that the town of Vancouver is again in ashes. The telegraph office has been destroyed, and no particulars can be obtained.

The Cholera.

ROME, July 17.—The following are the cholera returns for yesterday:—Brindisi, 75 new cases and 44 deaths; Teatuna, 37 new cases and 19 deaths; Latino, 16 new cases and 7 deaths; Venice, 1 new case and 1 death.

LONDON, July 12.—Since last report there have been eight cases of cholera and three deaths at Trieste; six cases and two deaths at Fiume.

The Apple Crop.

We believe the apple crop will prove a serious disappointment to many this year. The show of blossoms was immense, but either the cold weather or some other cause prevented it setting, and a careful examination of the trees will show, in most cases, but little fruit. Some winter kinds, such as Spies and Spitzenbergs, show fairly for a yield. Unfortunately, the dry weather bids fair to rob us of our wild raspberry crop. This favorite fruit will be much missed in our households.—Galt Reporter.

The Middleport Mail states that thorough inquiry shows that the apple crop is almost absolutely ruined in Niagara and Orleans counties, N. Y., the great apple producing district of that State.

The New Extradition Treaty.

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 17.—The reports concerning the ratification of the amended extradition treaty between the United States and Great Britain are premature and have caused some nervousness at the State Department where evasive answers and quashi denials are given to all questions about it. The facts are that such a treaty has been agreed upon between the British Foreign Office and Minister Phelps and the document is now before the Senate. The utmost vigilance has been observed in guarding it, and the secret, as to its contents, has been well kept. It has been been before the Senate for twelve days, but has not yet been ratified. As soon as the Senate acts, which may be in a few days, the treaty will be made public. The nature of the amendments to the treaty may be inferred from the President's message. He says: "The tenth article of the treaty of 1842 stipulated for the surrender in respect of a limited number of offences. Other crimes no less inimical to social welfare should be embraced, and the procedure of extradition brought in harmony with the present international practice." It is understood that treaty will include dynamiters within its scope, and that it may also enable the United States to reach over into Montreal for a choice assortment of bank cashiers, bribers of aldermen and other enterprising American citizens.

HELPING THE TOWN.

While the citizens of Peterborough are individually anxious enough for promoting the interests of the town, (by way of reaction from their personal property,) yet there is an unfortunate absence of the spirit of co-operation so notably exhibited in other places. The city of Toronto is a notable example in this respect. When any enterprise is afoot, calculated to benefit the city, every citizen, from the humblest to the highest, seems to take a personal interest in "seeing the thing through." The success of their Industrial Exhibition, which has become a permanent institution, and an annual attraction which draws tens of thousands to the city, leaving tens of thousands of dollars distributed among the citizens, may be cited. The recent musical festival and the Pythian demonstration are other cases in point, showing that Toronto appreciates the profit of drawing a crowd to the city. And Peterborough should profit by their example and pursue a course which would redound, not only to the prosperity of the town in a direct pecuniary sense, but advertise its advantages, industries and resources far and wide.

Every year there are annual meetings of synods, conferences, grand lodges, etc. held, and as these all have local representatives, there is no reason that one or more of these should not be held annually in Peterborough. Only a day or two ago the annual session of of the Masonic Grand Lodge was held in Windsor, a town about half the size of Peterborough, crowded on the extreme western verge of the province, as far from the centre of it as is geographically possible. Yet last week there hundreds of Masons and their wives, crowding the hamlet for several days, leaving there were hundreds of dollars per day. Now, Peterborough is the most centrally situated eligible place in the province, and there is no good reason why the above grand meeting should not have been held here. In fact the central position of this town and its suitability for such gatherings, might be used to secure it as a permanent place of meeting for such bodies, if proper means were employed and proper inducements extended. In London, Ont., a few days ago, the annual meeting of the Moulders' Union was held, and during the session, the treasurer paid out the sum of $15,000 to members, a a very large proportion of which was left in the city. On the 9th of next month, the Peterborough representatives will go to London to attend the Grand Lodge of Oddfellows. Over two hundred Oddfellows, with their wives, will be in the city for days and the individual expenses of every visitor will be from $5 to $10 per day. All this counts, and, for this reason Toronto strains every nerve to fill her borders, full to overflowing several times a year. This Grand Lodge should meet here next year and it will do so, if proper means are employed. The local representatives would willingly give the invitation, but they must be backed by some reliable assurance, that the hospitality of the town shall be properly extended to the visitors, whom they, in the name of the town may invite. A reception committee of the town Council, headed by the Mayor, as our first citizen, should be formed and also a committee of citizens, who would make it a point to cater to the enjoyment of the visitors, point out the sights, show them the town, explain its advantages and point out its resources and make the stay of the visitors so pleasant, that those, who did not want to come here to live, would speak a good word for the town, that would be heard in every part of the Province. Let action be taken at once, and let some of the representatives go to the Grand Lodge, empowered to invite on behalf of the citizens of Peterborough, the lodge to hold its session here next year, with the assurance that the people will unite in giving them a hearty welcome and unstinted hospitality. Who will be the first public-spirited citizen of influence to move in this matter? The course of action suggested need not be confined, by any means, to Oddfellows, but might embrace every organization holding annual grand gatherings. The Grand Masonic Lodge will be held next year in Brockville, but if action had been taken in time, Peterborough might have enjoyed the pleasure and profit of having them for guests.

FLORAL STYLES.

(As seen by New York Reporter for American Florist.)

Brilliant fabrics, such as gauze with a sheen, and light draping materials with gold and silver threads run through, are much in vogue just now to enhance the beauty of flowers. At a wedding a bay window was fantastically upholstered with light foliage asparagus, Lygodium, scandens and ferns—and a single portiere of silver gauze was looped back with a cluster of pink peonies. The curtain, which was transparent, was charmingly trimmed with begonia bloom, it seeming to glisten through the flowers. A bell of pink roses and "dusty miller" swung in the centre, the cords of which were silver, and likewise the tassels. A chime of golden bells is much used. All the bells—either three or five—are made of yellow flowers. The largest bell looks much like brass, being composed of African marigolds and calendulas. The smaller bells are made with yellow daisies and Perle roses and are heavily festooned with field buttercups. The bells are swung from a lever covered with marigolds, and all have cords of deep yellow or old gold.

Ornamental arches made of large flowers, such as peonies, hydrangeas, rhododendrons and snowballs are the most favorite to place over cornices, mirrors, cabinets, or in any spaces where there is room for decoration. The arch is of a single color and kind of flower. These are very handsome made of laurel bloom, with its exquisite blush. It is quite the style to place a large loose bunch of flowers in the centre of a mirror, suspending by garlanded wires, or to use a set design instead. A pierced heart is popular, or a pair of oars made in foliage and crossed, are graceful.

All bridal robes are trimmed more or less with blossoms. Around the skirt small clusters of lily of the valley are caught on at the top of the lace flounce or whatever trimming finishes the skirt. A bride this week wore white orchard sprays up the front of her gown, had her veil fastened with a single spray, and carried a bouquet of orchids. Another bride had her gown trimmed with snowballs, which looked marvellously elegant, holding the costly lace that was draped over her skirt. Her bouquet was a large cluster of lily of the valley, and a border of snowballs surrounding them. Sweet pea blossoms are considered the most charming flowers for young brides just now, pale pink and white ones are selected. Bridesmaids are carrying field daisies, tied with scarfs of tulle, and buttercups with yellow tulle to hold the stems. Crimson tulle is bound around the stems of Jacqueminot roses when used by bridesmaids. There is an effort to make summer bouquets pyrimidal in form, but this does not take when roses are the flowers used. They are tied together very loosely and in very large clusters. Small light flowers are graceful shaped into a pyrimidal bunch, if it is made very even. Bon Silene buds and mignonette make up this way charmingly, having the buds at the small end. These bouquets are tied with ribbon of "grass-green" color or of mignonette tint.

The most elaborate dinners lately decorated have been for sporting clubs, and many of the embellishments have been suggestive of coaching, or tennis, archery, etc. A drag worked out in red, yellow and black was was placed on a large oval bed of ferns for a centre piece of one of the coaching clubs. The men had horns of flowers for favors, and the ladies hand-glasses surrounded with horseshoes of blue corn flowers. For a dinner of an archery club the centre ornamentation was a target. This was made of Jacqueminot roses, with a bull's-eye of yellow buds. The piece was fringed with ferns; the favors were bows and arrows made of small blossoms of different kinds. Glass is very fashionable for holding and combining with flowers. At a gentleman's dinner this week a mirror, eight feet long, extended through the table. This was edged twelve inches wide with Jacqueminot roses.

Moss rosebuds are the most in vogue for luncheon parties, which is a very popular way of entertaining with those who live a short distance out of town and invite friends for a day in the country. These moss buds are cut with long stems, and are sometimes carelessly piled up in the centre of the table to be distributed, or are filled into a rush basket or creel to be passed around. Rush pockets are very simple and delightful holders for rosebuds or field flowers, and are much used for luncheon favors. They can be filled out to hold a large lot of flowers or a small number. Straw bouquet-holders, shaped like those of silver, are also quite fashionable for luncheons, when the favors are nosegays, to prevent the blossoms from wilting, as they do when carried in the hand. Caterers are garnishing dishes with flowers much more than has been the rule. Blossoms not only ornament the table but decorate the dishes. A form of ice cream has a light chain of asparagus vine at its base. Mats of sea-weed are placed under the half shells of oysters or clams that comprise the first course. Salads are charmingly garnished with nasturtium vines in flower, and the pungent vine is often cut up with the salad greens.

Steamer designs are being made with great taste and bring large prices. The newest basket is of bronzed straw in the shape of a satchel, bent down at one edge as if the straw was limp. The satchel lies on an easel which is covered with foliage. There are usually three clusters of flowers in the satchel, one at each side and a very large one in the centre where the straw bends down. A favorite basket for a steamer gift, when fruit is to be sent, is called the "peach basket." It is a small or miniature "bushel basket" that will hold about two dozen peaches. It is filled with them or apricots and is placed on a straw wheelbarrow, the running gear of which is trimmed with foliage. In the barrow beside the basket are choice flowers filled in to almost hide the fruit. Dainty little crates of linies are made up for use on board steamers, being very acceptable in sea-sickness. These are bound with old gold ribbons, and are enclosed in the hampers of yellow flowers that are gotten up with golden daisies, calendulas, Marechal Niel roses and buttercups, just now.

Commencement favors are ordered in profusion, one florist usually getting all the orders from one school, where graduates present each other with flowers. High flaring baskets with tall loop handles are filled one side with roses of a single color, and on the other side with a wild flower or some tender blossom. An exquisite basket of this style was made up with Souvenir de Malmaison roses one side and pink clover blossoms the other. The handle was tied with the fashionable "yellowish-green" ribbon. Field daisies and moss rosebuds are made in wreaths to present graduates, and sashes of blossoms are worn from one shoulder to the belt and are tied with the belt sash, or rather finished with the bow of this ribbon. These sashes are made of white net, on which blue corn flowers or lily of the valley is sewed. If cut shapely they look very pretty on the conventional white muslin dress of the school-girl.

The stages where commencement exercises take place are usually decorated. A favorite style is to have two straight bars extending in the centre, and on these long coils of smilax thrown over and carelessly looped back with ribbons. From bar to bar foliage-covered boughs are thatched over the top, and in this green bower the graduates sit. Palms build it out on each side. When corsage bunches are worn by graduates these are made round, and are pinned into the waist trimming almost on the shoulder they are worn so high. This is probably to make room for the badge, which is generally the school insignia on these occasions. A present sent a graduate was a basket round and flat, from which rose three horns of plenty. The base basket was filled with long-stem hybrid roses. The cornucopias were filled with Jacqueminot, Merechal Niels and La France roses. The small ends of the horns were tied with ribbons, and a cluster of lily of the valley to droop down, which looked very graceful.

BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS.

"He who has a love for the beautiful in nature, In his heart cannot be wholly bad."—Anon.

We are passing through one of the most beautiful of the seasons; a long winter has opened our hearts to more fully appreciate the refining influences which nature is now throwing around us. The verdure of the fields, the wonderful bloom of the trees, and above all the transcendent beauty of the spring and summer flowers, all conspire to bring to our hearts a fervent love for the beautiful in nature. Truly when we "consider the Lilies of the field," we see that "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

This love for flowers which is so strong in the human heart, has been the means of creating an industry which counts its devotees by the thousands, giving employment to many hundreds more, feeding many mouths and filling many hearts with a pleasure unsurpassed by anything earthly. The writer was once engaged with a number of hands in taking up Rose bushes from a large field, for the purpose of shipping them to different sections of the country. As this work was performed during the latter part of September, the majority of the bushes were in full bloom. The whole field contained about 20 acres, all planted to Roses, and the reader may imagine that this vast field covered with the bloom of many hundreds of plants of colors ranging from pure white to the darkest crimson, was a sight, which even we from the nature of our business were familiar with, caused us to stop and admire. Necessity compelled us to strip these bushes of their flowers and leaves in order that they might be handled to better advantage. It seemed a cruel thing to do, but there was no alternative, especially as they represented to their owner dollars and cents, which to his mind was of more importance than floral beauty. The work of stripping these bushes was performed by boys and girls, a number of each being with us on the occasion mentioned. As the work commenced the force was gathered, and soon little fingers were busy ruthlessly plucking the beautiful buds from the bush. As the children were called to their work, we noticed one little girl of about ten years who did not respond to the order, but stood with downcast eyes. Going to her we asked the trouble, when in reply the child burst into tears, and replied, "Oh! sir, I cannot pull those beautiful flowers in pieces, I love them so I cannot bear to hurt them." We immediately gave the child other work to do, not having the heart to ask her to perform an act which seemed to her only sacrilege.

Thus we ever find it. A love for flowers which has always existed in the hearts of the human race and which time cannot obliterate. The careworn man of business, whose hours are filled with the task of solving business problems, finds among flowers that relief which anything else utterly fails to give. Association with the beautiful gifts of God brings to our hearts better thoughts, and we are lifted for a time, in spirit at least, from the sordid atmosphere to a purer clime in which there is no guile.—The American Garden.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

He was silent at last in sheer despair. It was all over; he had no more hope. Life had never held such a brilliant chance for any man, and now it was utterly lost. Instead of wealth, luxury, happiness, there was nothing before him but disgrace. He could almost have cursed her as she stood there in the moonlight before him. A deep groan, one of utter, uncontrollable anguish escaped his lips. She went nearer to him and started back in wonder at the white, settled despair on his face.

"Captain Langton," she said, quietly, "I am sorry—I am sorry—I am indeed sorry—that you feel this so keenly. Let me comfort you."

He appealed to her again more passionately than ever, but she interrupted him.

"You mistake me," she said; "I am grieved to see you suffer, but I have no thought of altering my mind. Let me tell you, once and for all, I would rather die than marry you, because I have neither liking nor respect for you; but your sorrow I cannot but feel for."

"You have ruined me," he said, bitterly, "and the curse of a broken-hearted man will rest upon you!"

"I do not think the Darrells are much frightened at curses," she retorted; and then, in all the magnificence of her shining gems and golden-hued dress, she swept from the spot.

Yes, he was ruined, desperate. Half an hour since, entering that conservatory, he had wondered whether he should leave it a happy, prosperous man. He knew now that there was nothing but blank, awful despair, ruin and shame, before him. He had lost her, too, and love and hate fought fiercely in his heart. He buried his face in his hands and sobbed aloud.

A ruined man! Was ever so splendid a chance lost? It drove him mad to think of it! All was due to the willful caprice of a willful girl.

Then he remembered that time was passing, and that he must tell Sir Oswald that he had failed—utterly, ignominiously failed. He went back to the ballroom and saw the baronet standing in the center of a group of gentlemen. He looked anxiously at the captain, and at his approach the little group fell back, leaving them alone.

"What news, Aubrey?" asked Sir Oswald.

"The worst that I can possibly bring. She would not even hear of it."

"And you think there is no hope either now or at any future time?"

"I am, unfortunately, sure of it. She told me in plain words that she would rather die than marry me, and she laughed at your threats."

Sir Oswald's face flushed; he turned away haughtily.

"The consequence be on her own head!" he said as he moved away. "I shall make Elinor Rocheford an offer to-night," he added to himself.

The captain was in no mood for dancing; the music and light had lost all their charms. The strains of a beautiful German waltz filled the ballroom. Looking round, he saw Pauline Darrell, in all the sheen of her jewels and the splendor of her golden-hued dress, waltzing with Lord Lorimer. Her beautiful face was radiant; she had evidently forgotten all about him and the threat that was to disinherit her.

Sir Oswald saw her too as he was searching for Elinor—saw her radiant, triumphant, and queenly—and almost hated her for the grand dower of loveliness that would never now enhance the grandeur of the Darrells. He found Elinor Rocheford with Lady Hampton. She had been hoping that the captain would ask her to dance again. She looked toward him with a faint smile, but was recalled to order by a gesture from Lady Hampton.

Sir Oswald, with a low bow, asked if Miss Rocheford would like a promenade through the rooms. She would fain have said "No," but one look from her aunt was sufficient. She rose in her quiet, graceful way, and accompanied him.

They walked to what was called the white drawing-room, and there, standing before a magnificent Murillo, the gem of the Darrell collection, Sir Oswald Darrell, made Elinor Rocheford a quiet offer of his hand and fortune.

Just as quietly she accepted it; there was no blushing, no trembling, no shrinking. He asked her to be Lady Darrell, and she consented. There was very little said of love, although his wooing was chivalrous and deferential. He had secured his object—won a fair young wife for himself, and punished the proud, defiant, willful girl who had laughed at his threats. After some little time he led his fair companion back to Lady Hampton.

"Miss Rocheford has done me very great honor" he said; "she has consented to be my wife. I will give myself the pleasure of waiting upon you to-morrow, Lady Hampton, when I shall venture to ask for a happy and speedy conclusion to my suit."

Lady Hampton, with a gentle movement of her fan, intended to express emotion, murmured a few words, and the interview was ended.

"I congratulate you, Elinor," she said. "You have secured a splendid position; no girl in England could have done better."

"Yes," returned Elinor Rocheford, "I ought to be ticketed, 'Sold to advantage;'" and that was the only bitter thing the young girl ever said of her brilliant marriage.

Of course Lady Hampton told the delightful news to a few of her dearest friends; and these, watching Pauline Darrell that night in the splendor of her grand young beauty, the sheen of her jewels, and the glitter of her rich amber dress, knew that her reign was ended, her chance of the inheritance gone.

CHAPTER XVIII.

PAULINE THREATENS VENGEANCE.

"Pray do not leave us, Miss Hastings; I wish you to hear what I have to say to my niece, if you will consent to remain;" and Sir Oswald placed a chair for the gentle, amiable lady, who was so fearful of causing harm to her willful pupil.

Miss Hastings took it, and looked apprehensively at the baronet. It was the morning after the ball, and Sir Oswald had sent to request the presence of both ladies in the library.

Pauline looked fresh and brilliant; fatigue had not affected her. She had taken more pains than usual with her toilet: her dress was a plain yet handsome morning costume. There was no trace of fear on her countenance; the threats of the previous night had made no impression upon her. She looked calmly at Sir Oswald's flushed, agitated face.

"Pray be seated, Miss Darrell," he said; "it is you especially whom I wish to see."

Pauline took a chair and looked at him with an air of great attention. Sir Oswald turned the diamond ring on his finger.

"Am I to understand, Miss Darrell," he asked, "that you refused Captain Langton last evening?"

"Yes" she replied, distinctly.

"Will you permit me to ask why?" he continued.

"Because I do not love him, Sir Oswald. I may even go further, and say I do not respect him."

"Yet he is a gentleman by birth and education, handsome, most agreeable in manner, devoted to you, and my friend."

"I do not love him," she said again; "and the Darrells are too true a race to marry without love."

The allusion to his race pleased the baronet, in spite of his anger.

"Did Captain Langton give you to understand the alternative?" asked Sir Oswald. "Did he tell you my resolve in case you should refuse him?"

She laughed a clear, ringing laugh, in which there was a slight tinge of mockery. Slight though it was Sir Oswald's face flushed hotly as he heard it.

"He told me that you would disinherit me if I did not marry him; but I told him you would never ignore the claim of the last living Darrell—you would not pass me over, and make a stranger your heir."

"But did he tell you my intentions if you refused him?"

Again came the musical laugh that seemed to irritate Sir Oswald so greatly.

"He talked some nonsense about your marrying," said Pauline; "but that of course I did not believe."

"And why did you not believe it, Miss Darrell?"

"Because I thought if you had wished to marry you would have married before this," she replied.

"And you think," he said, his face pale with passion, "that you may do as you like—that your contempt for all proper laws, your willful caprice, your unendurable pride, are to rule every one? You are mistaken, Miss Darrell. If you had consented to marry Aubrey Langton, I would have made you my heiress, because I should have known that you were in safe hands, under proper guidance; as it is—as you have refused in every instance to obey me, as you have persisted in ignoring every wish of mine—it is time we came to a proper understanding. I beg to announce to you the fact that I am engaged to be married—that I have offered my hand and heart to a lady who is as gentle as you are the reverse."

A dread silence followed the words; Pauline bore the blow like a true Darrell, never flinching, never showing the least dismay. After a time she raised her dark, proud eyes to his face.

"If your marriage is for your happiness, I wish you joy," she said, simply.

"There is no doubt but that it will add greatly to my happiness," he put in, shortly.

"At the same time," resumed Pauline, "I must tell you frankly that I do not think you have used me well. You told me when I came here that I was to be heiress of Darrell Court. I have grown to love it, I have shaped my life in accordance with what you said to me, and I do not think it is fair that you should change your intentions."

"You have persistently defied me," returned the baronet; "you have preferred your least caprice to my wish; and now you must reap your reward. Had you been dutiful, obedient, submissive, you might have made yourself very dear to me. Pray, listen." He raised his fine white hand with a gesture that demanded silence. "My marriage need not make any difference as regards your residence here. As you say, you are a Darrell, and my niece, so your home is here; and, unless you make yourself intolerable, you shall always have a home suitable to your position. But, as I can never hope that you will prove an agreeable companion to the lady who honors me by becoming my wife, I should be grateful to Miss Hastings if she would remain with you."

Miss Hastings bowed her head; she was too deeply grieved for words.

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

Musical.

Mr. J. S. Parker will be at his rooms, Lynch's Block, Hunter street, 3rd floor, from August 1st to August 10th, to make arrangements for lessons. He has four vacancies for private pupils.

A Dog's Doings.

A spaniel dog was on exhibition in the window of a George street fruit dealer during Sunday. It crushed berries, squeezed lemons, and generally demoralized the fine fruits in the show window in its rambles.

G. P. R. Filling.

The ravine just west of the creek, formed by the embankments of the main line and siding has been filled in, a train of ten flat cars manned by about thirty men, bringing the earth and two teams and men doing the levelling.

Extension of Premises.

The great drawback to the otherwise flourishing business of the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company is that the business is continually outgrowing the premises. Many additions have recently been made, and now work has been begun—the foundation walls are laid—for the extension of the boiler room, northward, close to the missing link siding. The new addition will be 96 x 41 feet, one story in height.

Plenty of "Pluck."

The local examiners, says the Belleville Ontario, have just completed their labors in the entrance examination, and the result is 27 recommended out of 209 applicants, and as 377 marks are necessary to qualify, this number may be further reduced by the Inspectors at Toronto. At Belleville 150 candidates presented themselves and 20 passed. At Tweed 25 wrote and 3 passed. At Deseronto 34 wrote and 4 were recommended. The most failures were in orthography and orthopy, many missing the greater part of the detached words on the dictation paper.

For all kinds of fine fruit—call at Ostrom's, George street.

Aids to Sight

The number of persons young and old, whose sight is affected in some form or other is very great, and seems to increase daily. On the other hand it is evident that as nature fails in this respect, science comes to the rescue. The attention of all those who require aids to their sight is called to the fact that Mr. P. H. Morris, the eminent Oculist-Optician, will on Tuesday and Wednesday next, July 20th and 21st visit Mr. John McKee's drug store, George street Peterborough, for the purpose of adjusting the B. Laurance Pebble and other spectacles and eyeglasses, to all who may wish to avail themselves of the opportunity. As Mr. Morris fits these glasses on thoroughly scientific principles, and has a reputation of giving satisfaction in every instance, it behooves every person whose sight is defective to avail themselves of this opportunity of having the most perfect pebble spectacles adjusted to their needs, so as to last many years, and to comfort and strengthen their sight.

A Pleasant Pic-nic

The pic-nic excursion of the Charlotte Street Methodist Sunday School, though it had not a very bright beginning, was a most pleasant affair, and all enjoyed themselves thoroughly. The excursionists numbering over three hundred, arrived in Lakefild about eleven o'clock, proceeded with well filled baskets to the P. C. A. Hall, which had been engaged for the occasion. An energetic committee busied themselves in preparing dinner, which was disposed of about one o'clock. By this time the day was as bright as could be and the entire party gave themselves up to pleasure. A number of games and sports were engaged in to the delight of the participants, while a large number availed themselves of the splendid boating afforded. During the afternoon, the steamer "Cruiser" carried those who desired on a trip up the lake. After its return the sports were again resumed. In these Mr. Charles Porter, was successful in winning the men's race, and was presented with a fine tooth comb. The winner of the girls' race was presented with a bunch of clothes pins; and so on to the end of the programme. Tea was also taken in the hall. The excursion returned about 8.30 o'clock.

Fresh White Fish, Trout and Bass, arriving daily at Ostrom's, George St.

Reward Offered.

The Peterborough Water Company offer a reward of $5 for the conviction of any person stealing water from their hydrants or stand pipes.

Garden Depredations.

A resident of the west end has laid information against a number of boys, who on Sunday night ruined his flower garden. A number of valuable plants were torn out by the roots. The complainant values the plants destroyed at $50.

Across the Continent.

On Saturday the William Hamilton Manufacturing Works shipped a lath holter and lath machine to the Royal City Planing Mills, British Columbia. A wide area of patronage this establishment enjoys—from the "strabilarious Atlantic to the pellucid Pacific."

Open Air Services.

The Young Men's Christian Association held a meeting in the pavilion at the Court House Park yesterday afternoon. The attendance at the park was large. The Salvation Army held an open air meeting in the Central Park yesterday afternoon, and, of course, attracted a large gathering.

Organ Recital To-night.

Never put off until to-morrow what you can do to-day," therefore come this evening to St. Andrew's church and hear the magnificent new organ, at its opening by Dr. Davies, the unexcelled organist of St. James Cathedral, Toronto. Think twice before you decide not to be there or you will regret it. Admission only 25 cents.

The New Exhibition Buildings.

A meeting of the directors of the Central Exhibition was held on Saturday last, to consider the tenders for the erection of the new exhibition buildings. Mr. William Fitzgerald whose tender was the lowest, $11,500, was awarded the contract. The buildings are to be completed by September 15th. The work is in good hands. Mr. Fitzgerald is an experienced builder, and no doubt the new structure will receive full justice at his hands.

The Scott Act at Cobourg.

A correspondent of the Port Hope Guide tells how the Scott Act in working at Cobourg:—"Such a shameful disregard of sobriety, law and order I never heard tell of. On Saturday night last, and in fact every day, the streets are ornamented with drunken men. No attention whatever is paid to the law and it is an indisputable fact that beer is on draft and you can get any liquors you call for in any hotel in town! One hotel man here has made his boast that receipts for liquor sales were larger than before the Act came into force, besides having no license to pay."

An Unprofitable Investment.

A short time ago, Mr. Alex. Donnelly arranged with the Directors of the Peterborough Central Exhibition, for the use of the exhibition grounds as a pasture for two or three of his horses, on the condition that he should do a specified amount of levelling and grading to the grounds. All went well for a short time and Mr. Donnelly did a certain amount of levelling. On visiting the grounds the other day he was surprised and grieved to find his white-faced black horse, a handsome animal for which he refused $225 a short time ago, dead at the bottom of one of the wells. This well, from which the pump had been taken out last fall, was covered over with boards. The boards had probably been disarranged or removed, and the horse in the darkness of night had evidently wandered into the hole. It was found impossible to haul the dead animal out, and the well was filled in. Mr. Donnelly has the sympathy of the public in his loss.

A Baillieboro Outing.

On Saturday a Baillieboro excursion party, consisting of about 150 persons, passed through town en route for Lakefield and the back lakes. The party took steamer and went to Burleigh and viewed the canal works now in progress there. After a day of delightful pleasure the party returned to town and took the express for Fraserville, whence they drove to their homes. The presence of lunch baskets, a violin or two and swains and sweethearts in confidental twos, strolling round the platform, indicated that dancing, dining and spooning had formed an important part in the day's programme. One cannot wonder at the devotion of the boys of the party, for the Baillieboro girls are exceptionally pretty. Their fresh, clean country complexion stood the severe test of the electric light, as was shown when they were sampling Coughlin's confectionery, while waiting for the train. Our girls may "lay them out" in the matter of bustles, but in the matter of cream-laid complexions, with the flush of the stolen clover bloom, mantling on velvety cheeks, the town damsels have to climb 'way up in the back benches.

Church Chimes.

Prof. Burwash, of Victoria University, Cobourg, conducted the services in St. Paul's Church, yesterday, morning and evening. His discourses were able and impressive and were listened to by large congregations.

Reception services were held in the Charlotte street Methodist Church on Sunday evening. At the conclusion of an appropriate sermon from Acts, the 11th chapter and 26th verse, by Rev. F. H. Wallace, B.D., upwards of one hundred new members, who has been on probation for about four months, were received into the full membership of the church. There were also a number received by certificate from other places, and several received on probation. The names of the new members were read over, and they walked forward to the communion rail, when Rev. F. H. Wallace, pastor of the church, extended to them the right hand of fellowship and addressed to them words of welcome. After the reception the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to the members of the church. The services were solemn and impressive.

No Coalition for Gladstone.

Lord Hartington Declines to Join the Tories—The Duke of Argyle Likely to be Viceroy of Ireland.

LONDON, July 18.—Midnight.—Up to this hour 392 Conservatives and Unionists, 187 Gladstonians and 83 Parnellites have been elected. The standing of the parties now is:—

Total number of seats	670
Number of elections held	663
To be held	7
Conservatives elected	318
Unionists	74
Gladstonians	187
Parnellites	83
Conservative and Unionist majority	123

The different party classifications of the new members agree with a closeness that is really surprising, in view of the great number of returns and the keenness of political ties, but no two match on every name. There are four or five members whose attitude is more or less dubious, and, in dealing with these, the competitors allow themselves some latitude. The returns cover 663 seats, leaving only seven unreported, exclusive of Speaker Peel. The distribution is as follows:—Conservatives, 318; Unionist Liberals, 74; Gladstonites, 187; Nationalists, 83. A Unionist muster of 392 ranked against 270 Home Rulers. Thus far there is a majority of 123 against Mr. Gladstone on his Irish policy The Conservatives have a plurality of fifty-six over the Liberals, but they fall twenty-seven below the united vote of the Liberals and Nationalists. The seven constituencies still to be heard from were represented in the last parliament by one Conservative, three Gladstonites and three Nationalists. If they hold their former political complexion the new house will be composed of 319 Conservatives, 74 Unionist Liberals, 190 Gladstonites and 86 Nationalists.

Mr. Gladstone Will Resign.

LONDON, July 18.—At an informal meeting of the Cabinet on Saturday, Mr. Gladstone spoke in favor of immediate resignation and was supported by Earl Spencer and Mr. Morley. Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Childers, Mr. Campbell Bannermen and Sir Farrer Herschel were in favor of challenging a vote of the House of Commons on a motion affirming the principle of Home Rule for Ireland. Subsequently at dinner Mr. Gladstone stated that he had inflexibly decided to resign and conduct an uncompromising opposition. In this decision Sir Wm. Harcourt and Mr. Childers then concurred.

They Will Not go Into a Coalition

LONDON, July 18.—Lord Hartington and Sir Henry James have definitely refused to join a coalition ministry Lord Salisbury's offer to make the Duke of Argyll premier was contingent upon Lord Hartington's joining the coalition and of course is now withdrawn. The Duke of Argyll will probably be made Viceroy of Ireland, with Right Hon. Edward Stanhope as chief secretary.

EGAN'S IMPERIAL TRUSS

Read the following extract from a letter of a well-known citizen of St Catharines,—hundreds like it:

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 20 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two rupturless trusses made in York State, another one $16. Nothing would retain my Hernea. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come through. I find me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KERR.

This new Spiriel Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every case of rupture, but send stamp for our "rearise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony price list and questions for you to answer. DR. WASHINGTON, Throat and Lung Surgeon, 215 Yonge St., Toronto:

St. Thomas, June 23, 1886.

THE JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and so I am now able to attend to my work once more. I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat.

Yours truly, W. H. COX.

There were present Mayor Stevenson, in the chair, Councillors Cahill, Davidson, McNaughton, Kelly, McNeil, Yelland, Moore, Rutherford, Menzies and Hartley.

After routine the Clerk read the following

FROM THE THRONE.

The Mayor intimated that there were several matters of interest which he wished disposed of. He thought some definite action should be taken with regard to the Brown memorial. The County Council had acted so economically at their last meeting that he was sure it would be useless to ask for anything. Mr. Hayes, appointed by the Government to take charge of the drill shed, said he would be willing to take care of the park, but wanted authority to keep the boys from breaking windows and doing other mischief around the park. This, he was confident, the Council would grant. He thought some action should be taken by the Council with regard to the telegram received from the Mayor of Vancouver. The Mayor also intimated to the Council that at the last meeting of the School Board a resolution to have a joint meeting of the Board and Council, to consider the advisability of erecting High School buildings should receive attention. He also informed the Council that Mr. White, agent for office cabinets, had been communicating with him with a view of securing an order for a cabinet for the clerk's office. His Worship then called for reports.

FINANCE REPORT.

Mr. Davidson, Chairman of the Finance Committee, read the following report;

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:

GENTLEMEN.—Your Finance Committee beg leave to report and recommend the payment of the following accounts:

Central Iron & Bridge Works	$ 104 15
D. Bellegham	77 00
The Canadian Rubber Co	554 40

All of which is respectfully submitted,
R. S. DAVIDSON,
Chairman.

Peterborough, July 5th, 1886.

Mr. Rutherford took objection to the Rubber Company's account, which he held it was not necessary to pay until the company tested the hose.

Mr. Davidson said the town had received a guarantee, which was sufficient.

Mr. Rutherford contended that the guarantee was useless as it was not given by the manufacturers, an American company, but by their agents, the Canadian Rubber Company.

Mr. Moore held that the guarantee of the Canadian Rubber Company was better than that of an American firm and all that was necessary.

Mr. McNaughton asked what Mr. Bellegham's account was for, and was informed that it was for furniture for the Mayor's office. Mr. McNaughton held that all accounts should state what the amount was for. He was informed that the clerk had detailed statements of each account.

The report, on motion, was then adopted.

WATER WANTED.

Moved by Mr. Cahill, seconded by Mr. Davidson, that the petition of Rev. Mr. Torrance and others be referred to the Fire, Water and Light Committee with instructions to place one hydrant, not now required within the limits originally agreed upon between the Water Company and the corporation, on the area covered by said petition, and report to this Council

Mr. Moore expressed himself in favor of referring the petition of Rev. Mr. Torrance and others to the Fire, Water and Light Committee. He also pointed out the want of a hydrant on London street

Mr. Cahill admitted that all parts of the town should be considered, but contended that the South Ward was neglected, not in water alone, but in the matter of lighting.

Mr. Rutherford pointed out that should this hydrant proposed be out of line, agreed upon by the town and company, extra expense would be incurred should it be placed.

Mr. Hartley spoke up for the rights of the fourth ward, which he claimed had three hydrants out of sixty.

Mr. Moore then moved, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, as an amendment to Mr. Cahill's motion, that the petition of Rev. R. F. Torrance and others be granted when it is ascertained that a sufficient number of names are on it.

The amendment was put and declared carried.

Mr. Cahill called for a vote on the original motion, which was taken and resulted in its being carried, Mr. Menzies, who voted for the amendment, also voting for the original motion. The Mayor also voted for the first motion.

SECURITY REQUIRED.

Moved by Mr. Davidson, seconded by Mr. McNaughton, that all officers of the town holding positions of trust be required to give security for such, as the Council may require.—Carried.

Mr. Moore stated that he had heard that Mr. Beavis, Local License Inspector, had been depositing in the bank in his own name the amounts he collected for dog tags.

Mr. Beavis was heard, and stated that the report was correct. He placed the money in the bank for security, and put it in his own name, as he otherwise would not have security for the receipts he granted. The issuing of tags was a new departure for him, and he wished to be instructed by the Council.

Mr. Moore and Mr. Menzies thought it was a high-handed action for Mr. Beavis to place the town's money in the bank in his own name, and thought that he should be censured for so doing.

The Mayor said he was confident Mr Beavis thought he was doing what was best under the circumstances.

Mr. Menzies moved, seconded by Mr. Hartley—That all moneys collected by Mr. Thomas Beavis, Local License Inspector, be be paid over to the Town Treasurer at once, and that the Town Treasurer give his receipt for the same.—Carried.

BUILDING INSPECTOR.

Mr. Rutherford moved, seconded by Mr. Moore,—That Chief of Police Cooper be appointed Building Inspector for the town of Peterborough.—Carried.

CHARITY ACCOUNT.

Mr. Hartley called the attention of the Council to the fact that he had been presented with a communication from the Protestant Home, which claimed the sum of $133 due the Home by the town for the keeping of Willie Manning at the Children's Hospital.

It was generally admitted that the town would have to pay the amount.

Mr. Hartley moved, seconded by Mr. Menzies,—That the amount of $133 be paid to the Treasurer of the Protestant Home, amount due for the keeping of Willie Manning.—Carried.

CABINET FOR THE CLERK.

Moved by Mr. Kelly, seconded by Mr. McNeil—That the request of Mr. White in regard to a cabinet for the clerks' office be referred to the Property and Building Committee with power to act.—Carried.

SIDEWALK.

Moved by Mr. McNeil, seconded by Mr. Kelly,—That a sidewalk be laid in front of Mr. Geo. Hutchinson's residence on Sherbrooke Street.—Carried.

THISTLES TO BE THINNED OUT.

Mr. Moore moved, seconded by Mr. Yelland,—That the Street Inspector be directed to have the thistles and weeds on the principle streets cut down, and that a good man be employed.

Mr. Cahill suggested the passage of a bylaw to compel property owners to cut the weeds in front of their places. Several councillors were in favor of engaging two men. However, Mr. McNaughton's suggestion to employ a "good" man was acted upon and the motion carried.

DRAINAGE.

Mr. McNeil asked the Chairman of the Property Committee what had been done with regard to the Lewis drain.

Mr. Rutherford said in investigating the matter he found that it would be necessary to build a new drain for the town. The post-office contractor was trying to arrange for a drain to be run down Water street and Simcoe street, which he thought might be utilised. The Street and Bridge Committee had the scheme under contemplation.

Mr. Cahill said the Street and Bridge Committee had not agreed to deal with the matter. The government contractor had been endeavouring to arrange for the running of a drain down Water street to Simcoe street and thence to the river, by which to carry off the post office sewage, and had spoken to him proposing to join with the town in building a drain as proposed. This he thought would not interfere with the Property Committee building a drain from the town buildings down Simcoe street.

The Mayor said Mrs. Nicholls and Mr. Landy, were anxious that a large drain should be run down Simcoe street, and promised to contribute towards its construction.

THE BROWN MEMORIAL

Moved by Mr. Menzies, seconded by Mr. Hartley,—That $100 be given towards the Brown Memorial in Central Park, in conjunction with the Brown Memorial Committee, and that a further sum of $25 be given to the committee towards beautifying the front of the grounds.—Carried.

CARETAKER OF CENTRAL PARK.

Moved by Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Yelland,—That Mr. Hayes, now occupying a part of the drill shed in the Central Park, be and is hereby appointed caretaker of the Central Park without salary, and that he be requested to prevent games being played on the park and prosecute any person for injury to the property now, or that may be hereafter be placed there.—Carried.

POSITION OF HYDRANTS.

Moved by Mr. Cahill, seconded by Mr. McNaughton,—That the Fire Water and Light Committee be and they are hereby directed to furnish to this Council at the first meeting, a statement showing the number of hydrants in each ward of the town and the number of hydrants that may be erected, where placed, and the number of feet between each hydrant.—Carried.

TOWN SOLICITOR'S TAXES.

Moved by Mr. Davidson, seconded by Mr. Menzies,—That the matter of the Town Solicitor's taxes on the town building be referred to the Finance Committee. Carried.

DOG TAGS.

Mr. Moore called the attention of the council to the fact that only about $260 had been collected for dog tags, when $450 was collected last year.

RELEASED.

Moved by Mr. McNeil, seconded by Mr. Kelly,—That Mr. Beavis be relieved of the duty of granting dog tags, and that the Town Treasurer assume the duties of Mr. Beavis.—Carried.

DOGS MUST DIE.

Moved by Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Rutherford,—That the clerk be directed to issue notice giving notice that unless dog tags are procured in one week, that dogs untagged will be destroyed.

The Council then adjourned for three weeks.

Police Court.

Robert Henderson Arrested and Fined for Assaulting Frederick Spratt, of Stanhope, Roddy Convicted of Unlawfully Selling Liquor and Fined $160.

Robert Henderson, of Nassau, was arraigned before Police Magistrate Dumble this morning, charged by Frederick Spratt with assaulting him and committing upon him grievous bodily harm. Henderson admitted that he had committed a common assault.

Mr. Moore appeared for the defendant.

Frederick Spratt was sworn, and testified—I was standing, talking to Alex. McNaughton yesterday afternoon, at the Red Mills, Nassau, when Henderson, the defendant, came up to me, and after asking what I had said about Protestants, struck me on the ear, at the same time calling me a b——, adv. He also said he would lick me if I was worth it. I walked away and Henderson followed and kicked me. He then seized and choked me. During the struggle which followed, Henderson bit me on the arm in three places, and on the back, drawing the blood. Alex. McNaughton and Gilroy were present.

To Mr. Moore,—I am a Catholic and Gilroy is a Protestant. I did call Gilroy a Protestant b——, in fun, before the fight began. I did not have any words with Henderson before he struck me. Henderson spoke to Gilroy and to me but I did not speak to him. I am not always raising disturbances. Henderson did not say anything to me about being a coward for calling the boy—Gilroy—names until after the row was over. I can show you the bites if you like.

Robert Henderson, the defendant, was sworn and said:—At noon yesterday, McNaughton and Spratt were talking at the mill. I heard them take my name in vain. Spratt said something to me, but I don't remember what it was. McNaughton asked the boy—Gilroy—if Spratt called all the men in the mill Protestant sons of bitches. Gilroy said Spratt had. Spratt denied it partly. I then hit Spratt a tap on the ear. I thought his words applied to me. Wm. McNaughton heard Spratt call me the name mentioned. I turned to go to the pump for a drink and Spratt seized me by the legs. I hit him them. I did not bite him to my knowledge.

The magistrate—Do you think you could bite him without knowing it. Are you that kind of an animal? I don't think you are telling the truth.

Witness—I did not bite him to the best of my knowledge. Spratt struck at me.

The Magistrate—There are four bites upon Spratt, made by some animal, which he has shown to Chief Cooper. I will deal with your case mercifully, but will impose upon you a fine that will make you remember that you should not bite. I will fine you $20 and costs, to be paid forthwith, and in default of payment, one month in jail.

The fine was paid.

RODDY AGAIN CONVICTED.

The magistrate then delivered his judgment in the case of Queen vs. Roddy, by which the defendant was charged with unlawfully selling liquor. He held that the lease made by Roddy to Reynolds, was a device to evade the law. He found the defendant guilty and imposed a fine of $160 and costs, in default of payment and distress, three months imprisonment.

Mr. Roddy was sent for and appeared in court. When asked if he admitted the first conviction as laid in the charge, he said "I was not convicted lawfully." He finally admitted the first conviction, which admission was necessary to sustain the second conviction.

The Sharpless strawberry still keeps its place as the best for general culture, its ample, luxuriant foliage ensuring a full supply of large fruit, in ordinary seasons, and of its flavor nothing but praise can be said. At this meeting it was the leading sort in every collection exhibited. Alongside of it in many cases was the Captain Jack, a sort that stands high in the estimation of the cultivators, as well for its perfect form as for its general good qualities. Boyden, Cumberland and Longfellow are also favorites, the latter for its very superior flavor.

SCATTERING THE TAXES.

Hon. Mr. Blake, in his recent public addresses, has done a good work in exposing the misdeeds of the present Conservative Administration. The reckless, and wanton waste of the public funds on works, which are not of immediate necessity, is bad enough, but when the public money is wasted absolutely—given away to reward political doers of dirty work—the crime is inexcusable and worthy of condign punishment. The following extract from Hon. Mr. Blake's speech at Hampton, shows how, under cover of printing public documents, it is possible for a Government supporter to pocket $20,000 in a printing contract without lifting a letter of type. Mr. Blake said: "In this connection, take the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway Commission report. The Government gave the job of printing that report, at prices far higher than the contract rates, to Messrs. Stephenson, sons of Mr. Rufus Stephenson, (formerly M. P. for Kent, and now Inspector of Colonization Companies, a Government employee,) and proprietors of the Chatham Planet, which they owned in some sort of connection with their father. Messrs. Stephenson had not the facilities for the work; the printing ought to have been done at Ottawa; and after a while they actually sub-let the work to the Government contractors at Ottawa. These did the work and received their pay from the Messrs. Stephenson, who pocketed at least $30,000 by this gross job. Thus you see that in the most open and flagrant manner the public money was thrown away to feed the favorites of the Ministry. The fact is plain that the money paid for printing is used as a corruption and jobbery fund. Scores of thousands of these pamphlets are sent, not abroad, but to our own people to promote, not the influx of settlers from abroad, but migration from one part of Canada to another. The system is vicious. The assisted immigration should be abolished, the expenditure largely curtailed, and the whole department administered honestly and on business principles, instead of after the present fashion."

THE cost to the country of Sir John's blundering statute-mongering in respect to the McCarthy License Act, is estimated at one million dollars. A pretty tidy sum to pay for the sake of the premier's experimenting to "show that little tyrant, Mowat"—and the exhibition did not take place after all.

TORONTO is some three or four thousand dollars short on the Knights of Pythias demonstration, owing to bad weather, but the citizens who reaped the financial advantage of the presence of so many strangers in the city, are not going to let the members of the committee suffer any personal loss. If Toronto has one distinguishing mark, beyond its mud, it is the stick-together of its citizens, where the pocket and reputation of the city are concerned.

Murdered by His Daughters.

The Horrible Crime of Two Virginia Girls.

PETERSBURG, Va., July 18.—Sol Joyner, an aged an inoffensive citizen of Southampton, a day or two ago went to a neighbour's, Wm. Prince, to make some repairs to that gentleman's mill. After the day's work he returned home, ate his supper, and after conversing a short time with his family he retired. That night after Joyner had fallen asleep, his two daughters, Mattie and Addie, aged respectively 12and 13 years, went to the bedside of their father armed with an axe, with which they chopped the head of the old man into a jelly. After making sure of their deadly work the girls made their escape in the night into Essex County, where they were subsequently arrested. They have both been committed to the county gaol to await trial. The only motive for the crime of the girls is revenge for a severe whipping which they had received from their father for taking provisions and wearing apparel without permission from a neighbor named J. D. Prince.

DECORATION DAY.

FLOWERS AT GENERAL GRANT'S TOMB.

The arch of masonry that now entombs the remains of General Grant was surmounted Decoration day with hundreds of imposing designs in flowers, between which were interspersing clusters of daisies and lilies in receptacles filled with water. The front of the vault was entirely draped with ivy, and on the center of the iron gate which is the entrance to the tomb, was a large crown of flowers in relief. This was made of white carnations, studded with camellias and festooned with Spirea Japonica. East side the crown hung a wreath of white roses. The top the arch of the tomb was surmounted with a cross of roses, and back of this was perched an eagle with outspread wings. The bird was most naturally and symmetrically fashioned and worked out in carnations and button daisies.

KLUNDER'S FLOWER SHOW—A COMPLETE DESCRIPTION.

BY JOHN THORPE.

The exhibition of Mr. C. F. Klunder at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city, has not been surpassed, and I question if it ever has been equalled in America. The features of the exhibition are entirely different from the ordinary run of horticultural exhibitions proper. The plan has been entirely from an artistic point of view, and has been extremely successful. The features of the exhibition were of general effect from all points.

Immediately upon entering the doors, to the right and left were beds of spring flowers in geometrical designs, one of hyacinths and tulips and the other of narcissus and tulips. The blending of the colors was such as one would find under the best treatment of the art known to the profession. On entering the main building, on either side were decorations representing ivy-clad walls. The approach was narrow in comparison, but immediately on reaching the open floor the effect was all that could be desired. The triumphal arch in the distance, some 200 feet away,, presented an imposing appearance. At the back of that a fountain fifty feet high, and again a mirror forty feet distant, the size of which was forty by twenty feet, gave a perspective, which was, to say the least, without parallel. The vista leading directly to the columns of the arch was formed by immense palms, many of which were twenty feet in diameter, elevated on pedestals eight feet high, thuss llowing the visitors to pass beneath. In a line with the palms were tables, six feet wide and ten long, banked with roses, each with different varieties, conspicuous among which were Mabel Morrison, Baroness Rothschild, Paul Neyron, Gen. Jacqueminot, Anna de Diesbach and Jules Margottin. The plants were in 6 to 8 inch pots, with an average of from five to seven blooms on each. In front of these tables were expensive vases representing thousands of dollars filled with the choicest hybrids, as many as 150 in each. The grouping of the flowers was in accordance with the color of the vases. A carpet leading to the arch of crimson and black gave a setting to the approach which has not been equalled.

To the right and left of the main aisle, occupying the whole of the floor, were groups of plants somewhat indiscriminately disposed, but so artistically arranged as to give a feature which has not been before presented; for instance, a large Sabal palm from Honduras, which Mr. Klunder had expressly imported for this occasion, towered above the second tier of boxes, having a spread of thirty feet, and stood on the floor like the giant of a tropical forest. In close proximity to these were guarled trees eighteen to twenty feet high, entirely covered with orchids in full flower. Flanking the auditorium were tables some four feet square, occupied by roses, palms, ferns and other plants. Between the tables were flowering plants, such as cinerarias, Paris daisies, geraniums and ferns. Again there were groups of giant tree ferns standing isolated with circles of ferns and dracenas at their base.

The boxes were draped with sashes of crimson cloth clasped in the centre with bunches of daffodils, giving an expression to the whole which was admirable in the extreme. Some idea of the effect may be imagined when the height of the floor to the upper tier (seventy-feet feet) is taken into consideration.

The triumphal triple arch was seventy-five feet wide, the main arch being sixty feet high by thirty wide, and the side arches forty feet high and fifteen wide. The arch was composed of the Palmetto palm, Irish junipers and California pines. This imposing structure gave an aspect of grandeur not easily imagined. Immediately in the line of the main arch was the fountain, some forty feet high, a work of art, which was certainly a difficult thing to equal in point of beauty. The basin of the fountain was entirely filled with calla lilies. On the outside of the basin were impressive groups of Asparagus tenuissimus, Lilium longiflorum and candidum, the whole being enclosed by a wire fence 4 feet high, studded with small electric lights, of which there were more than 2,000. This, as may easily be imagined, was the centre of attraction, and the remarks of approval and gratification were many and oft repeated. A mirror thirty by ten feet in the distance added to the beauty of the surroundings. The framework of the mirror was of Palmetto palms, smilax and southern moss. Immediately in front of the mirror was a bank of Lilium longiflorum eight feet wide, extending the whole length. The reflection of the lilies in the mirror was something wonderful. On the left of the mirror was a bank of English primroses, arranged so naturally as to give one the impression that it was one of the wayside banks of England.

To the right were Chinese primroses, arranged with the same skill and good taste. Flanking the sides were natural pieces of shrubbery composed of lilacs in blossom, various trees and shrubs, the irregular marshes being formed by the spring flowers, such as hyacinths, tulips and daisies.

As a contrast between the fountain and the bank of lilies, before the mirror was an oval bed of cinerarias, composed of some 200 plants, the smallest plant of which was at least a foot in diameter. The crimson and blue shades of this group gave a prismatic effect equal to a rainbow.

The font, four feet high and nearly as many feet in diameter, composed of more than $200 worth of flowers, was such an attraction as to impede the visitors materially in their efforts to see all there was to be seen.—The American Florist.

A CAR OF FLOWERS.

California flowers are rarely seen in New York, notwithstanding our excellent express facilities. Yet an entire car of floral designs and loose flowers were actually transported across the continent, a distance of 3,000 miles, to decorate the tomb of General Grant at Riverside Park, New York, on Decoration day. The car, which started from Oakland, Cal., in charge of Mr. Sanborn, with James Hutchinson, a well-known florist of that city, contained some thirty designs, some of them very elaborate. The most noticeable was a representation of General Grant on horseback, larger than life size. The horse was almost entirely of candytuft, with the mane and tail of pampas plumes. The saddle was of red geraniums and the stirrups of calendulas. The face of the rider was made of white stocks, and the under side of the broad-brimmed hat of blue ageratum, while the crown was composed of roses. The trousers were made of candytuft, and the coat of blue ageratum. The design was shipped in three pieces, being too large to go into the car entire. Other designs were a wreath four feet in diameter, a Grand Army badge four by 5 feet, flag three by four, a large "faith, hope and charity," four large pillows, a broken column, and numerous other small designs. A very handsome design was packed in a large flat box with a large top. It was a sword and scabbord of immortelles, crossed in the centre of a large wreath of California laurel, which was embellished with a few sprays of stephanotis, eucharis and adiantum feras, a bunch of which was tied to the wreath with a bow of wide satin ribbon. Though not showy it was an elegant piece of work. In addition to the designs there were about fifty buckets of loose flowers in water, such as callas, roses, marguerites, stocks, paeonias, caudidum, lillies and carnations. The car was well supplied with ice, and the flowers were sprinkled several times each day while on the way. An inspection of the car when it reached Chicago May 27, showed that the candytuft, marguerites and callas had stood the severe test with the least damage, the candytuft particularly was apparently as fresh as though cut the previous day. Many of the other flowers, especially the roses, had suffered severely, though many of them were still presentable. We think this is the longest shipment of fresh flowers in quantity which has ever been made, and it marks the possibilities of the future. What a delightful fairy story it would have seemed to the florist of fifty years ago had he been told that fresh cut flowers would yet be shipped from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and yet such is a realised fact.

Bessie, three years old, on seeing a fine bed of pansies in bloom, cried out: "See the funny little faces 'out any heads."

From 2,000 Muscat vines, William Halesworth of this place made, last season, 301 boxes of Raisins. At this rate 20 acres of vines would make at least 4,000 boxes of Raisins, and at $2 a box would yield a very desirable income.

"Are you going to make a flower-bed here?" asked a young lady of her father's gardener. "Yes, miss; them's the order." "Why, it'll spoil our croquet ground!" "Can't help it, miss. Your papa says he's bound to have this plot laid out for horticulture, not husbandry."

A noticeable piece of bedding was seen by the excursionists to Dayton. It was a medallion of George Washington, planted on a steep slope of grassy bank. Mr. Chas. Beck, the designer, gives us the following notes of its formation: I used echeveria glauca for hair, bosom and eyes; alternanthera aurnana for face and spaulets; altern. parych. major for collar of coat; coleus abropurpureus for coat; and oxalis tropeoloides for outlines of face, eyes and nose.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

"It is my wish that you retain your present suite of rooms," continued Sir Oswald; "and Lady Darrell, when she comes, will, I am sure, try to make everything pleasant for you. I have no more to say. As for expressing any regret for the part you have acted toward my young friend, Aubrey Langton, it is useless—we will let the matter drop."

All the Darrell pride and passion had been slowly gathering in Pauline's heart; a torrent of burning words rose to her lips.

"If you wish to marry, Sir Oswald," she said, "you have a perfect right to do so—no one can gainsay that; but I say you have acted neither justly nor fairly to me. As for the stranger you would bring to rule over me, I shall hate her, and I will be revenged on her. I shall tell her that she is taking my place; I shall speak my mind openly to her; and, if she chooses to marry you, to help you to punish me, she shall take the consequences."

Sir Oswald laughed.

"I might be alarmed by such a melodramatic outburst," he said, "but that I know you are quite powerless;" and with a profound bow to Miss Hastings, Sir Oswald quitted the library.

Then Pauline's anger burst forth; she grew white with rage.

"I have not been fairly used," she cried. "He told me Darrell Court was to be mine. My heart has grown to love it; I love it better than I love anything living."

Miss Hastings, like a sensible woman, refrained from saying anything on the subject—from reminding her that she had been warned time after time, and had only laughed at the warning. She tried to offer some soothing words, but the girl would not listen to them. Her heart and soul were in angry revolt.

"I might have been a useful woman," she said, suddenly, "if I had had this chance in life; I might have been happy myself, and have made others happy. As it is, I swear that I will live only for vengeance."

She raised her beautiful white arm and jewelled hand.

"Listen to me," she said; "I will live for vengeance—not on Sir Oswald—if he chooses to marry, let him—but I will first warn the woman he marries, and then, if she likes to come here as Lady Darrell, despite my warning, let her. I will take such vengeance on her as suits a Darrell—nothing commonplace—nothing in the way of poisoning—but such revenge as shall satisfy even me."

In vain Miss Hastings tried to soothe her, to calm her, the torrent of angry words had their way.

Then she came over to Miss Hastings, and, placing her hand on her shoulder, asked:

"Tell me, whom do you think Sir Oswald is going to marry?"

"I cannot imagine—unless it is Miss Rocheford."

"Elinor Rocheford—that mere child. Let her beware!"

CHAPTER XIX.

CAPTAIN LANGTON DESPERATE.

A short period of calm fell upon Darrell Court. Miss Darrell's passion seemed to have exhausted itself.

"I will never believe," she said one day to Miss Hastings, "that Sir Oswald meant what he said. I am beginning to think it was merely a threat—the Darrells are all hot-tempered."

But Miss Hastings had heard more than she liked to tell her pupil, and she knew that what the baronet had said was not only quite true, but that preparations for the marriage had actually commenced.

"I am afraid it was no threat, Pauline," she said, sadly.

"Then let the new-comer beware," said the girl, her face darkening. "Whoever she may be, let her beware. I might have been a good woman, but this will make me a wicked one. I shall live only for revenge."

A change came over her. The improvement that Miss Hastings had so fondly noticed, and of which she had been so proud, died away. Pauline seemed no longer to take any interest in reading or study. She would sit for hours in gloomy, sullen silence, with an abstracted look on her face. What was passing in her mind no one knew. Miss Hastings would go to her, and try to rouse her; but Pauline grew impatient.

"Do leave me in peace," she would say. "Leave me to my own thoughts. I am framing my plans."

And the smile that came with the words filled poor Miss Hastings with terrible apprehensions as to the future of her strange, willful pupil.

The captain was still at the Court. He had had some vague idea of rushing off to London; but a letter from one of his most intimate friends warned him to keep out of the way until some arrangement could be made about his affairs. More than one angry creditor was waiting for him; indeed, the gallant captain had brought his affairs to such a pass that his appearance in London without either money or the hope of it would have been highly dangerous.

He was desperate. Sir Oswald had hinted to him, since the failure of their plan, that he should not be forgotten in his will. He would have borrowed money from him but for that hint; but he did not care to risk the loss of many thousand pounds for the sake of fifteen hundred.

Fifteen hundred—that was all he wanted. If he could have gone back to London the betrothed husband of Pauline Darrell, he could have borrowed as many thousands; but that chance was gone; and he could have cursed the girlish caprice that deprived him of so splendid a fortune. In his heart fierce love and fierce hate warred together: there were times when he felt that he loved Pauline with a passion words could not describe; and at other times he hated her with something passing common hate. They spoke but little; Miss Darrell spent as much time as possible in her own room. Altogether the domestic atmosphere at Darrell Court had in it no sunshine; it was rather the brooding, oppressive heat that comes before a storm.

The day passed when the Court was inspected by an army of workmen, when a suite of rooms was fitted up in the most superb style, and people began to talk of the coming change. Pauline Darrell kept herself aloof from all gossip, from all the whispers, that she was the lady for whom Sir Oswald's choice had fallen. And one day the baronet gave a dinner-party at which the ladies of the house were present, and there was no mistaking the affectionate manner.

Pauline Darrell's face grew dark as she listened. So, then, the threat was to be carried out, and the grand old place that she had learned to love with the deepest love of her heart was never to be hers! She gave no sign; the proud face was very pale, and the dark eyes had in them a scornful gleam, but no word passed her lips.

Sir Oswald was radiant, he had never been seen in such high spirits; his friends had congratulated him, every one seemed to approve so highly of his resolution; a fair and gentle wife was ready for him—one so fair and gentle that it seemed to the old man as though the last love of his youth had returned to him. Who remembered the bitter, gnawing disappointment of the girl who had cared so little about making herself friends?

The baronet was so delighted, and everything seemed so bright and smiling, that he resolved upon an act of unusual generosity. His guests went away early, and he retired to the library for a few minutes. The captain followed the ladies to the drawing-room, and, while pretending to read, sat watching Pauline's face, and wondering how he was to pay his debts.

To ask for the loan of fifteen hundred pounds would be to expose his affairs to Sir Oswald. He must confess then that he had gambled on the turf and at play. If once the stately old baronet even suspected such a thing, there was no further hope of a legacy—the captain was quite sure of that. His anxiety was terrible, and it was all occasioned by that proud, willful girl whose beautiful face was turned resolutely from him.

Sir Oswald entered the room with a smile on his face, and, going up to Aubrey Langton, slipped a folded paper into his hands.

"Not a word of thanks," he said; "if you thank me, I shall be offended."

And Aubrey, opening the paper, found that it was a check for five hundred pounds.

"I know what life in London costs," said Sir Oswald; "and you are my friend's son."

Five hundred pounds! He was compelled to look exceedingly grateful, but it was difficult. The gift was very welcome, but there was this great drawback attending it—it was not half sufficient to relieve him from his embarrassments, and it would quite prevent his asking Sir Oswald for a loan. He sighed deeply in his dire perplexity.

Still smiling, the baronet went to the table where Pauline and Miss Hastings sat. He stood for some minutes looking at them.

"I must not let you hear the news of my good fortune from strangers," he said; "it is only due to you that I should inform you that in one month from to-day I hope to have the honor and happiness of making Miss Elinor Rocheford my wife."

Miss Hastings in a few cautious words wished him joy: Pauline's white lips opened, but no sound escaped them. Sir Oswald remained for some minutes talking to Miss Hastings, and then he crossed the room and rang the bell.

"Pauline, my dearest child!" whispered the anxious governess.

Miss Darrell looked at her with a terrible smile.

"It would have been better for her," she said, slowly, "that she had never been born."

"Pauline!" cried the governess. But she said no more.

A footman entered the room, to whom Sir Oswald spoke.

"Go to my study," he said, "and bring me a black ebony box that you will find locked in my writing-table. Here are the keys."

The man returned in a few minutes, bearing the box in his hands. Sir Oswald took it to the table where the lamps shone brightly.

"Aubrey," he said, "will you come here? I have a commission for you."

Captain Langton followed him to the table, and some remark about the fashion of the box drew the attention of all present to it. Sir Oswald raised the lid, and produced a diamond ring.

"You are going over to Audleigh Royal to-morrow, Aubrey," he said; "will you leave this with Stamford, the jeweller? I have chosen a new setting for the stone. I wish to present it to Miss Hastings as a mark of my deep gratitude to her."

NEWS OF THE TOWN.

Musical.

Mr. J. S. Parker will be at his rooms, Lynch's Block, Hunter street, 3rd floor, from August 1st to August 10th, to make arrangements for lessons. He has four vacancies for private pupils.

Mr. Beavis Released.

The Council, yesterday evening, after discussing the dog question, released Mr. Beavis from duty of issuer of the brazen tags, and appointed in his stead Town Clerk McDonald. Mr. Beavis accepted the release with thanks. Parties who own dogs untagged will note the change.

No Games on Central Park.

At the meeting of the Council held last night, Mr. Hayes, caretaker of the drill shed, was appointed caretaker of the park with instructions to prevent games being played on the park, and also to prosecute persons who may do injury to the park Where will the boys play?

For all kinds of fine fruit—call at Ostrom's, George street.

The Lakefield Salvation Army Cases.

The Lakefield village Council, through their solicitor, Mr. A. P. Poussette, Q.C., have served Mr. W. A. Stratton, solicitor for the defendants in the above cases, with a notice that they abandon all the convictions except that against Martin, and that they will consider them as quashed. The Martin case will go to Toronto for further adjudication.

A Ponderous Calf.

Yesterday morning a thoroughbred imported Holstein cow, Berthalda, belonging to Mr. Thomas Stothart, of the "Peterborough Dairy," Smith, dropped a calf which weighed at the time of its birth, the great weight of 92 pounds. Last spring a grade Holstein, belonging to Mr. William Stothart, dropped a calf of the weight of 87½ lbs. This was thought an immense weight, but Mr. Stothart's thoroughbred has established a precedent which other stock breeders are invited to "get over," if possible

A New Business

Mrs. M. Carton has purchased the business and stock of the Bon Marche. The process of stock taking is now going on and when this is completed, which will be in a few days, the stock will be placed on the market and rushed off at astonishingly low prices. The stock has been purchased at a sacrifice and the new proprietor can and will give immense bargains in all the departments of which the extensive stock he has purchased, is composed. It will be recollected that Mr. Carton purchased the Isaac Robinson stock, and the manner in which he run it off and the great bargains he gave, will be still fresh in the minds of those who got more than their money's worth in that sale. In the same manner it is proposed to run off the stock of the Bon Marche. Parties interested should not reject this opportunity to secure immense bargains. Watch for further particulars in a few days.

"Crescent Camp Coterie."

Messrs. Geo. Dawson and Chas. Russell, left town to-day, with tents innumerable and baggage unlimited, for Gin Island in Stoney Lake, to make preparations for the reception of the "Crescent Camp Coterie" of which they are the advance guard. The party will leave for Lakefield by train to-morrow, and thence by the "Fairy" to their camping grounds, the most salubrious spot on Gin Island, where they will spend ten days or two weeks in the enjoyment of camp life. The party will be composed as follows:—Mr. Walter Paterson, jr., chaperon, Mrs. Paterson, chaperone, Mr. J. Paterson, Miss Paterson, Miss M. Paterson; Mrs. J. Dixon, Miss M. Dixon, Miss L. Dixon, Messrs. Ed. George and Herb. Dawson, Miss Dawson, Miss S. Cameron, Miss K. Menzies, Messrs. Wm. Green and Chas. Russell, of town; Mr. James, of Warsaw; Wm. Donaldson, of Cincinnati; Miss Natrass, Miss Massie, Miss Thornhill, Miss Nicholls, and Messrs. J Massie, A. Parks and W. Stevens, of Port Hope; and W. Fogarty, and friends from Buffalo. Sergt. Billings goes along as chief cook. Should the weather be fine there is no doubt that the party will enjoy themselves as camping parties know how to do. Large fish stories and as large appetites will be one result.

Fresh White Fish, Trout and Bass, arriving daily at Ostrom's, George St.

New Bill Boards.

A. R. C. Hill is erecting a new range of bill boards on Hunter street, in front of the Morgan House stable.

Quoits.

If the weather is favorable, the second meeting of the T. C. will be held on the Little Lake to-morrow night. The first rink will be called at 7.30 sharp.

W. C. T. U.

Flowers for the hospital will be received at Miss Sanderson's store as usual, on or before Wednesday evening next. It is earnestly requested that those having flowers to spare will help in this work.

Rough on a Horse.

As a carter was going down the hill on Elizabeth street, Ashburnham, yesterday with a load of slabs, the load slipped forward on the horse and knocked it down. A number of witnesses of the accident went to the rescue, and removed the slabs from the prostrate animal. After a brief struggle it found its feet.

Attention Oddfellows!

The attention of the members of Otonabee Lodge is called to the fact that the Oddfellows of Port Perry will arrive in Peterborough, on a visit, at 9.15 a.m. on Thursday, 22nd inst. Members of Otonabee Lodge are particularly requested to meet at the G.T.R. station at the above named hour, to give the visiting brethren a fitting reception. C. H. Clements, Rec.-Sec'y.

To be Shot on Sight.

Councillor Moore proposes amending his, or rather the Corporation dog by-law so that untagged dogs shall be shot on sight. The difficulty of the police capturing them has been realized, and hence the proposed change. One week's grace has been given and the Mayor has been authorized to issue posters announcing that all dogs not wearing the corporation tag will be shot on sight after one week. The police will practice in the meantime.

Hotel Extension.

Mr. E. Phelan doesn't seem to be afraid of the Scott Act. He has closed a contract with Mr. Thomas Rutherford for a brick addition to the rear of the Snowden House hotel building, Simcoe street. The annex will be 50x30 feet in size, built in the most substantial manner. Mr. Phelan has also built a stone wall of a length (including the present wall) of 196 feet. The wall is laid with good stone in waterproof cement, along the creek, and will do away entirely with the danger of damage by spring floods.

The Gun Club.

The members of the Gun Club engaged in a match yesterday afternoon, the Ashburnham men shooting against the town shootists The village team scored a victory by one point. The following is the score:—

"Wigs on the Green."

Mr. E. Phelan has begun proceedings against the Dominion Government in the matter of the postoffice site. His solicitor, Mr. S. H. Blake, has instructed the Dominion Government to place the new postal buildings for Peterborough on the Phelan lot (corner of Charlotte and George streets), purchased by the Government specifically for that purpose, and not to erect the said postal buildings anywhere else. Thus it will be seen Mr. Phelan intends holding the Government to their contract to place the Postoffice on his lot.

More Mixed than Mosie.

By reference to our report of the proceedings of the Town Council, it will be seen that Mr. W. H. Moore, a member of the Town Council, as solicitor for the defendant in the case of Queen vs. Morgan, in which the defendant was fined on his own testimony—against the principle of which Judge Galt has declared—applies to have the fine remitted, and the Council refers the matter to the Toronto solicitor, who is also the solicitor for the Scott Act Association. The uninterested citizen will be at a loss to understand where justice is "to get a show" in the matter. The matter should have been referred to "Poo Bah."

A Dirty Trick.

The other morning a barrel of "spoiled" meat was found on King street, near the residence of Rev. E. F. Torrance, which had evidently been placed there during the night. Mr. Beavis was notified and he, after making inquiries, had the nuisance burned. The party who placed it there has not been found. It is supposed that a local dealer in meats employed some person to cart the barrel away and bury it, and the party engaged getting tired of his contract, dumped the barrel off where it was found. The Chief of Police has been instructed to use his utmost endeavors to find the guilty party.

Mr. Bannel Sawyer, is at present out of town on a trip to New York State, in the interests of the Peterborough Business College. He intends visiting similar institutions in that State, in order to observe if there are any improvements in arrangement or method which he can introduce to the promotion of the efficiency of his own excellent business college.

St. Andrew's Organ Recital.

A Thoroughly Delightful Success.

Last evening a most successful organ recital in point of attendance and most meritorious in point of music, was held in St. Andrew's Church. The house contained about 700 of an audience, which embraced numerous representatives from every congregation in town. Dr. Davies, of St. James' Cathedral, Toronto, was the organist and his splendid performance was a revelation of the power and versatility of the organ in interpreting the masterpieces of the great musical masters. The following is the programme presented, with the variations and additions noted below:—

Overture in Sonata Form ..... Gustav Merkel
a. Andante } Symphony 5 .... Mendels.
b. Allegro Vivace }
Fuga in C Major ..... Bach
Swedish Music, ... "A Peasant's Wedding." (Soderman)
a. Fuga in D Major ..... Bach
b. Gavotte from "Ottone" ..... Handel
Serenade for Violin Solo ..... Haydn
Funeral March from a Pinafore Sonata ..... (Chopin
Romanza for Violin and Orchestra ... Beethoven
Grand March ... "Leonore" Symphony ... Raff

A glance at this shows the style of the musical treat enjoyed by the audience, and its splendid rendition by Dr. Davies only emphasized the enjoyment. His playing disarmed adverse criticism and only left room for unstinted praise. The programmes enjoined "strict silence on the part of the audience," but the latter were so carried away that, in the enthusiasm of their delight, applause involuntarily broke forth. This was so marked in the case of Haydn's "Serenade for Violin Solo," that Dr. Davies responded with a brilliant improvisation ("in strict time,") of great beauty. The seventh number, Chopin's "Funeral March from a Pianoforte Solo," was also received with equal favor, and the discriminating delight of the audience was rewarded by a splendid performance of Handel's "Dead March" in Saul. Altogether the entertainment was a most delightful one, and the audience is to be congratulated on the privilege they enjoyed, and the congregation on the possession of an organ of remarkable power, sweetness and range, as well as tasteful beauty of appearance, charmingly in keeping with their beautiful church.

CATARRH CURED—25 YEARS STANDING.

Dr. Washington, Throat and Lung Surgeon, 215 Yonge St., Toronto:

St. Thomas, June 28, 1886.

The Journal.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and as I am now able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat.

Yours truly, W. M. Cox.

Mr. J. M. Drummond, president of the Board, and Mr. Warren Taylor, secretary, acted in their official capacities.

The buyers were represented by Mr. Leary of Lindsay, Mr. Cook, Belleville, and Messrs. W. H. Wrighton, W. H. Clarton and B. Green, of town.

When the market opened Mr. W. Cribben, representing Myrtle Factory, Elmsmore, complained to the Board that a buyer, or agent of one of the buyers, who purchased from the Peterborough Board recently, had refused to take a number of boxes from several factories on the ground that the cheese was injured with the coloring used. The agent of the buyer, however, consented to take the cheese at a lower figure than was agreed upon at the market. In addition to being an agent for the buyer, this man of whom he spoke, was also an agent for Warrington's color, which he sold to several factories, after persuading the makers that Hansen's color was inferior. This buyer, according to his own statement, had received money from a cheesemaker on condition that he would not sell their his cheese were inferior. Mr. Cribben thought this thing should not be allowed to continue or it would injure the industry in the county. The color they were using was either inferior or this agent was imposing on the makers. It was evident to him that the agent was a fraud, as he misrepresented Hansen's color in order to sell the colour for which he was agent. Mr. Cribben said he was confident that Hansen's color was as good as any in the market. He had written to Mr. Frederickson, representative of the manufacturers of this color, who was present and might be heard.

Mr. J. D. Frederickson, of Little Falls, N. Y., agent for Hansen's color, was heard. He said he did not come to advertise Hansen's color, but to defend its good name which, he was informed, had been misrepresented in Peterborough county. He read a letter from Mr. Ferguson, one of the most extensive cheese dealers in America, and also from Mr. Derbyshire, president of the Western Dairymen's Association, who both testified to the superiority of Hansen's color.

Mr. Cook said he had been informed that the color used by the factories in Peterborough County was damaging the cheese by the alkali in it ate the 'bil' out of the cheese which was one reason why he did not give so much for Peterborough cheese as for other counties. He said Norwood cheese last year was spoiled with the color. It was much better this year.

The representative of the Norwood factory said they used the same color this year and their cheese was equal to any on the market.

The secretary said he was acquainted with the gentleman referred to by Mr. Frederickson and they were the best authorities in Canada on such matters. He thought the makers should know their business and should not be influenced by every agent. If they tried to please every buyer they would succeed like the man who tried to carry his ass.

The president referred to the system of re-selling. He said the Board held the first buyer responsible. They had nothing to do with second or third buyers or their agents. He then proceeded to open the market.

The English market was quoted at 49s. Mr. Wrighton began by offering 7⅞c for the full board. Mr. Cook offered 1-16 more. Mr. Leary offered 7 3-8c. Mr. Wrighton then increased his bid to 7¾c. Mr. Cook offered 7 5-8c. for selections. Mr. Wrighton again increased his bid, offering 7 9-16 for the Peterborough section, allowing the Lindsay section to stand at 7¾. The president asked Mr. Cook to make his selections, which he proceeded to do, but each factory when called upon refused to sell, holding for 8c.

After a short discussion it was decided to adjourn for one week, when it was considered the cheese would be in better condition for shipment. The market then closed, no sales having been made.

Police Court.

Liquor Cases Continued—Mary "Moxie"—Six Canadians Tested in Court—Thos Darcy Assessed for Assaulting Patrick Sofia.

Thos. Darcy was arraigned before Police Magistrate Dumble, this morning, charged by Patrick Sofia with having committed an assault upon him.

The defendant admitted the charge, but pleaded that the complainant had tantalized him.

Patrick Sofia testified—On Monday night I was talking with Darcy, at Clancy's hotel, about a dog which was lost. Darcy said he heard I knew where it was. I said I did not know where it was and Darcy called me a g—d — liar. I then called him a liar, when he struck me, stunning me for a time.

Wm. Clancy gave evidence in support of that of Sofia, except that he did not know who called the other "liar" first.

The magistrate found the defendant guilty and imposed a fine of $2, or ten days.

QUEEN VS. NEWHALL.

Mrs. Margaret Newhall and Samuel Newhall of Norwood, were summoned before the court, charged by Inspector Darling with having unlawfully kept liquor for sale, between the 1st of May and 16 of July.

Mrs. Newhall appeared and pleaded not guilty. She said she did not know why her son did not appear.

Mr. R. E. Wood appeared for the Crown and conducted the case.

Thomas Elliott was sworn and testified—I live in Norwood; I know Mrs. Newhall's place; I was in the house once since 1st of May; I did not get anything to drink; I do not know of any person getting anything to drink there. When I was working on the road I was given a drink by a man, but do not know who gave it to me. There were several of us there. I don't know who handed me the flask; when I got through with it there was nothing in it.

Duncan Costello, sworn.—I live in Dummer; I go to Norwood about once a week; I pass Mrs. Newhall's on the way to the village; I got a drink of water at Newhall's gate one day as I was passing; young Newhall was at the pump when I saw him first; I have not seen a bottle of liquor since the first of May.

Mrs. Newhall was then called.

The Magistrate informed her that she need not answer any question which might tend to criminate her.

Mrs. Newhall testified—I live near Norwood; I have not since the first of May kept any liquor for sale; Samuel, my son, brought some liquor to the house, but I do not know how much; my sons are heavy drinkers; I could not swear that he sold any; I never gave any away.

Several witnesses and Samuel Newhall being absent, the magistrate enlarged the case till Monday.

QUEEN VS. M'GREGOR.

Malcolm McGregor of Norwood, was summoned before the court, charged by Inspector Darling, with having unlawfully sold liquor between the 15th of June and the 16th of July, and also of having been convicted of a former offence.

The defendant pleaded not guilty.

Mr. W. A Stratton, appeared for McGregor, and Mr. R. E. Wood for the prosecution.

Robert Scriber was first called and testified—I live in Peterborough. I was at Norwood on July 12th; I was at Malcolm McGregor's hotel on that day; I had a drink with my brother of what was called "Moxie." It was the color of rye whiskey. It tasted like liquor and was my opinion at the time that it was rye whiskey. James McGregor served me. I had several drinks and found that it was intoxicating; I paid for what I called the house is called Mcgregor's hotel.

To Mr. Stratton—The first drink I had on July 12th was at Hastings; I had four drinks there; I can swear that I got whiskey at McGregor's; McGregor's was the only place in Norwood where I drank; I am not engaged to give evidence in this case nor am I interested in it. If my brother should state what I drank was not liquor, his statement would be of no value.

At this juncture P. C. Pidgeon strode into the court with a bottle of "Moxie."

Mr. Wood, after carefully reading the directions, to the court, opened the bottle and tasted the contents.

The witness was given a little of the "Moxie," and stated that it was the same stuff he drank at McGregor's.

Henry Scriber testified—I live near Norwood; I know Norwood pretty well and know McGregor's hotel; so far as I know, Mac. or Malcolm McGregor keeps it; I was in McGregor's on July 12th, I had a drink of what they call "Moxie." I don't mind all what it was like if I was hung for it; I think I could tell if I drank it again; my brother treated me and, and we drank from the same bottle; I did not think there was any liquor in it.

The witness was given a drink of the "Moxie" brought to court and pronounced it the same as that he drank at McGregor's.

J. McAvella was called and testified that he drank "Moxie" at McGregor's.

James McGregor was sworn and testified that he with the proprietor of the McGregor House, and put in a lease, made by his brother, Malcolm McGregor, to him, dating from 9th July to 1st August. $60 was the rental agreed upon for term of lease. An I. O. U. was accepted for the rent. Malcolm McGregor was absent from the house, arranging for a hotel in Grey county. The lease was bona fide.

Malcolm McGregor was sworn. He stated that the lease made by him to his brother was bona fide. He refused to state whether he had kept any intoxicating liquor for sale between the dates mentioned, on the ground that it might tend to criminate him.

The magistrate held that the lease was only a device to evade the law and found the defendant guilty of the charge of unlawfully selling liquor. It was not shown that a previous conviction had taken place, and he imposed a fine of $50 and costs.

WHAT IS A GENTLEMAN.

What is a gentleman? Is it a thing
Decked with a scarf-pin, a chain, and a ring,
Dressed in a suit of immaculate style,
Sporting an eye-glass, a lisp, and a smile?
Talking of operas, concerts and balls,
Evening assemblies and afternoon calls,
Sapping himself "At Homes" and bazars,
Whistling masurkas, and smoking cigars?

What is a gentleman? Say, is it one
Boasting of conquests and deeds he has done?
One who unblushingly glories to speak
Things which should call up a flush to his cheek?
One, who, whilst railing at actions unjust,
Robs some young heart of its pureness and trust;
Scorns to steal money, or jewels, or wealth,
Thinks it no crime to take honor by stealth?

What is a gentleman? Is it not one
Knowing instinctively what he should shun,
Speaking no word that can injure or pain,
Spreading no scandal and deep'ning no stain?
One who knows how to put each at his ease,
Striving instinctively always to please;
One who can tell by a glance at your cheek,
When to be silent, and when he should speak?

What is a gentleman? Is it not one
Honestly eating the bread he has won,
Living uprightly, fearing his God,
Leaving no stain on the path he has trod,
Caring not whether his coat may be old,
Prizing sincerity far above gold,
Recking not whether his hand may be hard,
Stretching it boldly to grasp its reward?

What is a gentleman? Say, is it birth
Makes a man noble, or adds to his worth?
Is there a family tree to be had
Spreading enough to conceal what is bad?
Seek out the man who has God for his guide,
Nothing to blush for and nothing to hide;
Be he a noble, or be in trade,
THIS is the gentleman nature has made.

Scott Act Excitement in Napanee.

At present, says the Belleville Ontario, there are several Scott Act trials going on at Napanee, in connection with which a question has arisen. Messrs. James and Miller, magistrates, have been charged by the defendants with being the complainants, and consequently the former are greatly incensed at them. A witness having stated that the magistrates offered $5 each if he would not have them (the magistrates) suspended, his statement was taken advantage of by those interested, and at once the magistrates were subpœnaed as witnesses. By this means it will be discovered what part they took in having the cases brought on. The matter has created quite a sensation in Napanee, and the court house was crowded.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 21, 1886.

THE failures for the United States and Canada, from January 1st, show a large decrease from those of last year as shown by Bradstreet's report.

IT APPEARS that Sir John's visit to the Northwest, has enlightened him. He has found out enough to convince him that it will not be politic to allow Dewdney to remain Lieut-Governor. Pity he had'nt made the discovery before Dewdney did so much to bring on the rebellion.

KNIGHTS of Labor have nominated parliamentary candidates for the central and west divisions of Montreal. It is not probable that Hon. Frank Smith, the member of the Dominion Cabinet, who declared the Knights of Labor were a "lot of thieves," will be employed to stump the city in their interests.

CABLE despatches present the Grand Old Man in a grander light than ever, when he is represented as saying :—"I have worked all my life to deliver the suffering people, and I mean to die as I have lived."

THE Young Liberals are likely to be represented in Parliament. Alderman Prefontaine is the candidate for Chambly for the House of Commons.

THE Minister of Justice has not yet given any decision on the question as to how the fines collected for the violation of the Canada Temperance Act are to be disposed of and as he is off on his holidays, the matter is likely to remain in abeyance for some time.

CHICAGO has not much confidence in Republican institutions, as security for person and property, and demands the establishment of a military station for the protection of peaceful citizens against the attacks of riotous citizens.

THE Port Hope Times calls the Macmaster scandal "one of the foulest the Grit smirt mills have turned out," and "one" it correctly adds "involving the political honour of Mr. Donald Macmaster, M. P. for Glengarry The facts are, as admitted by the Montreal Gazette, that a firm in trouble on account of breach of the Customs law," after having paid fines and penalties to the amount of $37,000, paid Mr. Macmaster $4,000 as counsel fee, and there is nothing to show that this fee has ever been earned by Mr. Macmaster. Now Mr. Macmaster is a supporter of the Government and there seems to be considerable ground for believing that this huge fee, larger than the income for one year of the majority of Toronto lawyers, for services in a "case half settled," was not paid for the recipient's legal services but for his influence, as a member of parliament, with the Government. The Montreal Trade Bulletin, not a political paper at all, and the Montreal Witness, an independent journal, make the charges straight and with so much confidence, that they demand an investigation. The Times says that the papers make the charge should in all honour make a retraction. But they show a greater disposition to prove their charges than to retract. If there is nothing in the charges let the parties accused bring the matter into a court of law. But they dare not do that. They prefer a simple denial of the charges to the risk of having them proved in a court of law.

DEATH AND FUNERAL.

None but citizens of this place can imagine the surprise and gloom cast over this village by the sad announcement of death of our much esteemed Reeve and physician, Dr. Morris, last Sunday morning, who died after being only confined to bed a few days, with inflammation of the stomach. Very few were aware of his illness. It was not considered very serious, but all that medical aid could do was of no avail, and death put an end to his sufferings about 5 o'clock a.m., Sunday morning. The funeral on Monday was one of the largest ever seen, there being about 100 vehicles, besides the School Board, members of the County Council and Omemee Council, Orangemen, Conservative Association, etc., in the procession, besides the following clergymen, namely: Rev. I. Tovell, Peterborough; Rev. Messrs. Greener and Pearson, Lindsay; Rev. Mr. Wilson, Ashburnham, late of Omemee; Rev. Mr. Barnes, Hampton; Rev. Mr. McCammus, Bethany; Rev. J. Ewing, Mount Pleasant; besides the resident ministers. The deceased was much respected amongst all circles, being of a very kind and gentle disposition, and has been practising his profession here for the last 25 years, gradually rising to a position of influence and wealth, leaving his bereaved family in very comfortable circumstances. His family consists of three daughters and two sons, who mourn the sad death of a kind and indulgent father. The family has the entire sympathy of the people in their sad bereavement.

The New Extradition Treaty

Unsatisfactory for Americans. Best Outdoors.

NEW YORK, July 20.—The following is the full text of the new Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the United States. The following are its provisions :

Article 1—The provisions of the tenth article of the said treaty will be and are hereby extended so as to apply to and comprehend the following additional crimes not mentioned in the said article, namely : (1) manslaughter ; (2) burglary ; (3) embezzlement, or larceny of the value of $20 or £10 and upward ; (4) malicious injury to property, whereby the life of any person shall be endangered, if such injuries constitute a crime according to the laws of both high contracting parties, and the provisions of the said article shall have the same effect with respect to the extradition of persons charged with any of the said crimes as if the same had been originally named and specified in the said article.

PROOF OF GUILT.

Article 2—The provisions of the tenth article of the said treaty and of this convention shall apply to persons convicted of the crimes therein respectively named and specified, whose sentence thereupon shall not have been executed. In the case of a fugitive criminal alleged to have been convicted of a crime for which his surrender is asked, a copy of the record of the conviction and of the sentence of the court before which such conviction took place, duly authenticated, shall be produced together with evidence that the prisoner is the person to whom such sentence refers.

NOT RETROACTIVE.

Article 3—This convention shall not apply to any of the crimes herein named and specified which shall have been committed, or to any convictions which shall have been prosecuted, prior to the date when this convention shall come into force.

POLITICAL OFFENDERS EXEMPT.

Article 4—No fugitive criminal shall be surrendered under the provisions of the said treaty, or of this convention, if the crime in respect of which his surrender is demanded be one of a political character, or if he prove to competent authority that the said requisition for his surrender has in fact been made with a view to try or punish him for a crime of a political character.

ONLY THE SPECIFIC CRIME.

Article 5—A fugitive criminal surrendered to either of the high contracting parties under the provisions of the said treaty, or of this convention, shall not, until he has had opportunity of returning to the state by which he has been surrendered or be detained or tried for any crime committed prior to his surrender other than the extradition crime proved by the facts on which his surrender was granted.

SUBJECT TO LOCAL LAWS.

Article 6—The extradition of fugitives under the provisions of the said treaty and the present convention shall be carried out in the United States and in Her Majesty's dominions respectively, subject to and in conformity with the laws regulating extradition for the time being in force in the surrendering state.

FINAL RATIFICATION.

Article 7—This convention shall be ratified and ratifications exchanged at London as soon as possible. It shall come into force ten days after its publication in conformity with the forms prescribed by the laws of the high contracting parties, and shall continue in force until one or other of the high contracting parties shall signify its wish to terminate it, and no longer.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

Miss Hastings looked up in grateful wonder. Sir Oswald went on talking about the contents of the ebony box. He showed them many quaint treasures that it contained; among other things he took out a roll of bank-notes.

"That is not a very safe method of keeping money, Sir Oswald," said Miss Hastings.

"No, you are right," he agreed. "Simpson's clerk paid it to me the other day; I was busy, and I put it there until I had time to take the numbers of the notes."

"Do you keep notes without preserving a memorandum of their numbers, Sir Oswald?" inquired Aubrey Langton. "That seems to me a great risk."

"I know it is not prudent; but there is no fear. I have none but honest and faithful servants about me. I will take the numbers and send the notes to the bank to-morrow."

"Yes," said Miss Hastings, quietly, "it is better to keep temptation from servants."

"There is no fear," he returned. "I always put the box away, and I sleep with my keys under my pillow."

Sir Oswald gave Captain Langton a few directions about the diamond, and then the ladies withdrew.

"Sir Oswald," said Captain Langton, "let me have a cigar with you to-night. I must not thank you, but if you knew how grateful I feel——"

"I will put away the box first, and then we will have a glass of wine, Aubrey."

The baronet went to his study, and the captain to his room; but in a few minutes they met again, and Sir Oswald ordered a bottle of his choicest Madeira. They sat talking for some time, and Sir Oswald told Aubrey all his plans—all that he intended to do. The young man listened, with envy and dissatisfaction burning in his heart. All these plans, these hopes, these prospects, might have been his but for that girl's cruel caprice.

They talked for more than an hour; and then Sir Oswald complained of feeling sleepy.

"The wine does not seem to have its usual flavor to-night," he said; "there is something wrong with this bottle."

"I thought the same thing," observed Aubrey Langton; "but I did not like to say so. I will bid you good-night, as you are tired. I shall ride over to Audleigh Royal early in the morning, so I may not be here for breakfast."

They shook hands and parted, Sir Oswald murmuring something about his Madeira, and the captain feeling more desperate than ever.

CHAPTER XX.

MYSTERIOUS ROBBER.

The sun shone on Darrell Court; the warmth and brightness of the day were more than pleasant. The sunbeams fell on the stately trees, the brilliant flowers. There was deep silence in the mansion. Captain Langton had been gone some hours. Sir Oswald was in his study. Pauline sat with Miss Hastings under the shade of the cedar on the lawn. She had a book in her hands, but she had not turned a page. Miss Hastings would fain have said something to her about inattention, but there was a look in the girl's face that frightened her—a proud, hard, cold look that she had never seen there before.

Pauline Darrell was not herself that morning. Miss Hastings had told her so several times. She had asked her again and again if she was ill—if she was tired—and she had answered drearily, "No." Partly to cheer her the governess had suggested that they should take their books under the shade of the cedar tree. She had assented wearily, without one gleam of animation.

Out there in the sunlight Miss Hastings noticed how cold and white Pauline's face was, with its hard, set look—there was a shadow in the dark eyes, and, unlike herself, she started at every sound. Miss Hastings watched her keenly. She evinced no displeasure at being so watched; but when the elder lady went up to her and said, gently:

"Pauline, you are surely either ill or unhappy?"

"I am neither—I am only thinking," she returned, impatiently.

"Then your thoughts must be very unpleasant ones—tell them to me. Nothing sends away unpleasant ideas so soon as communicating them to others."

But Miss Darrell had evidently not heard the words; she had relapsed into deep meditation, and Miss Hastings thought it better to leave her alone. Suddenly Pauline looked up.

"Miss Hastings," she said, "I suppose a solemn promise, solemnly given, can never be broken?"

"It never should be broken," replied the governess. "Instances have been known where people have preferred death to breaking such a promise."

"Yes, such deaths have been known. I should imagine," commented Pauline, with a gleam of light on her face, "that no Darrell ever broke his or her word when it had been solemnly given."

"I should imagine not," said Miss Hastings.

But she had no clew to her pupil's musings or to the reason of her question.

So the noon-day shadows crept on. Purple-winged butterflies coquetted with the flowers, resting on the golden breasts of the white lilies, and on the crimson leaves of the rose; busy bees murmured over the rich clove carnations; the birds sang sweet, jubilant songs, and a gentle breeze stirred faintly the leaves on the trees. For once Pauline Darrell seemed blind to the warm sweet summer beauty; it lay unheeded before her.

Miss Hastings saw Sir Oswald coming toward them; a murmur of surprise came from her lips.

"Pauline," she said, "look at Sir Oswald—how ill he seems. I am afraid something is wrong."

He drew near to them, evidently deeply agitated.

"I am glad to find you here, Miss Hastings," he said; "I am in trouble. May, Pauline, do not go; my trouble should be yours."

Pauline girl had risen with an air of [illegible] wearisome, intending to leave them alone. At his words—the kindest he had spoken to her for some time—she took her seat again; but the haughty, listless manner did not change.

"I am nearly sixty years of age," said Sir Oswald, "and this is the first time such a trouble has come to me. Miss Hastings, do you remember that conversation of ours last night, over that roll of notes in the ebony box?"

"I remember it perfectly, Sir Oswald."

"I went into my study, and put the box, with the notes in the box, to take their numbers and send them to the bank, and I could not find them—they were gone."

"Gone!" repeated Miss Hastings. "It is impossible! You must be mistaken; you must have overlooked them. What did they amount to?"

"Exactly one thousand pounds," he replied. "I cannot understand it. You saw me replace the notes in the box?"

"I did; I watched you. You placed them in one corner. I could put my finger on the place," said Miss Hastings.

"I locked the box and carried it with my own hands to my study. I placed it in the drawer of my writing-table, and locked that. I never parted with my keys to any one; as is my invariable rule, I placed them under my pillow. I slept soundly all night, and when I woke I found them there. As I tell you I have been to the box, and the notes are gone. I cannot understand it, for I do not see any indication of a theft, and yet I have been robbed.

Miss Hastings looked very thoughtful.

"You have certainly been robbed," she said. "Are you sure the keys have never left your possession?"

"Never for one single moment," he replied. "Has any one in the house duplicate keys?" she asked.

"No. I bought the box years ago in Venice; it has a peculiar lock—there is not one in England like it."

"It is very strange," said Miss Hastings. "A thousand pounds is no trifle to lose."

Pauline Darrell, her face turned to the flowers, uttered no word.

"You might show some little interest, Pauline," said her uncle, sharply; "you might have the grace to affect it, even if you do not feel it."

"I am very sorry indeed," she returned, coldly. "I am grieved that you have had such a loss."

Sir Oswald looked pacified.

"It is not so much the actual loss of the money that has grieved me," he said; "I shall not feel it. But I am distressed to think that there should be a thief among the people I have loved and trusted."

"What a solemn council!" interrupted the sheery voice of Aubrey Langton. "What gloomy conspirators."

Sir Oswald looked up with an air of great relief.

"I am so glad you are come, Aubrey; you can advise me what to do."

The baron told the story of his loss.

Captain Langton was shocked, amazed; he asked a hundred questions, and then suggested that they should drive over to Audleigh Royal and place the affair in the hands of the chief inspector of police.

"You said you had not taken the numbers of the notes; I fear it will be difficult to trace them," he said, regretfully. "What a strange, mysterious robbery. Is there any one you suspect, Sir Oswald?"

No; in all the wide world there was not one that the loyal old man suspected of robbing him.

"My servants have always been to me like faithful old friends," he said, sadly; "there is not one among them who would hold out his hand to steal from me."

Captain Langton suggested that, before going to Audleigh Royal, they should search the library.

"You may have made some mistake, sir," he said. "You were tired last night, and it is just possible that you may have put the money somewhere else, and do not remember it."

"We will go at once," decided Sir Oswald.

Miss Hastings wished them success; but the proud face directed toward the flowers was never turned to them. The pale lips were never unclosed to utter one word.

From its wonderful power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned the name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, and nutritive, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all

How to Detect the Forgeries.

Mr. John A. Strathy, manager of the Barrie branch of the Bank of Toronto, says that, "You can detect the forged $10 bills on the Canadian Bank of Commerce, now in circulation, as follows: The shading on the large green letters is much lighter than in the original—the large ten is green letter is too high on the paper, running into the coat of arms instead of being immediately under it." If you are at all in doubt get endorsement of the party—provided he or she is known to you, and a responsible party, we would add.

Fresh White Fish, Trout and Bass, arriving daily at Ostrom's, George St.

Exemplary Eden.

Tourists who patronize the pretty little steamer Cruiser all have the same story to tell of the exquisitely courteous treatment they receive from Mr. B. Eden, master. His obliging disposition inclines him to do everything in his power for the comfort and pleasure of his passengers. The tidiness of his beautiful steamer, the fine route over which it passes and the obsequious deference to the wishes of tourists, make this steamer worthy of the patronage of all who desire to spend a pleasant day.

Market Notes.

There was a lively market this morning, especially in fruits and vegetables, which were offered in large quantities and sold well. Prices were quoted: Butter, 13 to 15c.; eggs, 10c. for shipment, and 11 to 12c. for local use; chickens, 50 to 60c. per pair; raspberries, 80c. to $1.00 per pail; black currants, 10 to 11c. per quart; red currants, 8c. per quart; huckleberries, 7c. per quart; peas, shelled, 10c. per quart, in pod, 20c. per peck; beans, 4c. per quart; onions, lettuce, radishes, carrots, beets, turnips, &c., 5c. per bunch; celery, 10c. per bunch; cucumbers, 5c. each; squash, 10c. each; potatoes, 20c. per peck.

The E. S. Williams re Marshal & Smith and Heintzman Pianos—Compelled to Take a Back Seat.

Mr. J. W. Crosby, the new music dealer, gained two complete victories last week over the above named instruments with the celebrated Lansdowne & Stephenson Pianos in two cases of extreme competition, where Messrs. Smart and Hartley, together with nine assistants who knew more poetry than truth, had offered to sell at less than wholesale prices in order to defeat him. But truth and perseverance gained the day. The happy purchasers are now prepared to sympathize, in a musical manner, with the above named bereaved brethren—one of whom, it is said, paid $750 to learn how to sell a piano.

Yours truly,
d&w-1t. MONARCH.

Personal.

Mr. Newton C. Foote, of Louisville, formerly a resident of town, is in town on a visit to friends.

Mr. C. C. McDonald, representative of the American Press Association, was in town to-day, and favored the EXAMINER with a call.

Mr. C. E. Gault, of Montreal, of Gault & Brown, general managers of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, is in town in the interests of his company.

Mr. George Matthews, of Lindsay, and of the firm of Matthews & Sons, pork packers, of town, passed through town last night en route for Quebec, where he will take the steamer Vancouver, of the Dominion line, for Liverpool. Mr. Matthews, who has been doing a considerable export trade during the past year, goes to England in the interests of his business. His visit will cover about five weeks. During his absence Mr. W. Matthews will manage both the Lindsay and Peterborough branches of the business.

Dominion Doings.

Mr. James Fleming, M. P., has been renominated by the Liberals of Peel.

It is reported on good authority that the Papal Ablegate will confer some decoration from the Pope upon Mayor Beaugrand, of Montreal, and Mayor Langelier, of Quebec, both Liberals.

Reports received by the Department of Agriculture from the Northwest rafer hopefully to the condition of the crops. The number of immigrants is considerably in advance of that of last year.

The new steamer which the Dominion Government contemplate purchasing in New York for the fisheries protection service, is the Yosemite, a vessel of four hundred tons. The price to be paid is about $45,000.

Chief Sherwood, of Ottawa, is in possession of some of the new counterfeit Bank of Commerce $10 bills. It is supposed that these bills are being manufactured in the Eastern Townships, and Dominion detectives are turning their attention to this quarter, under the personal superintendence of the chief.

Mr. H. P. McCraney, son of Mr. W. McCraney, M. P., was in Vancouver during the last conflagration. He had a narrow escape with his life, and, as it was, lost all his clothes, except those in which he stood. Mr. McCraney having finished a heavy contract on the Vancouver Island Railway, recently purchased an interest in a sawmill in Vancouver city. He was one of the few fortunate ones whose premises were not burned out.

EGAN'S IMPERIAL TRUSS

Read the following extract from a letter of a well-known citizen of St Catharines.—hundreds like it:

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, I tried unsuccessfully one or two trusses, especially as I could not be fitted without measure, among others, recently, two supposed improvements made in New York State, costing me $25. Nothing would retain it. Hence, I may say I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with perfect satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it at the regular time [illegible] down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. I have much pleasure in recommending it to the public, and will be glad to answer any enquiries, or publish it for the benefit of other sufferers.

This new Spiral Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to perfect. It is simple, it can be worn with perfect ease during the hardest work or severest exercise; and 30 out of every 100 of adults [illegible] cases, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full particulars, price list and questions for you to answer. When writing please mention this paper.

DR. WASHINGTON, Throat and Lung Surgeon, 215 Yonge St., Toronto:

St. Thomas, June 23, 1886.

THE JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and as I am now able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat.

Yours truly,
W. H. COX.

The Second Regatta.

Lively Races Rowed During a Thunder-storm.

The second regatta of the season, under the auspices of the Peterborough Boating Club, was held on the Little Lake yesterday evening. Although the regatta had been postponed for a week on account of wet weather, the postponement did not insure a dry day, and the races were rowed during the raging of a thunder storm. About seven o'clock a monster mass of threatening clouds rolled along from the northwest, forming a semi-circle, which, as it approached, grew darker, more dense and more threatening, assuming an appalling grandeur. Out of the mouth of the storm flashed forked tongues of lightning, while away in its throat it muttered thunderous threats. A large number of spectators who were wending there way to the lake shore noticing the approaching storm, sought shelter by the nearest route. A small number of the enthusiastic aquatic sports, in addition to the oarsmen, would not be scared by the elements and remained for the races. Mr. Gus. Lech, captain of the rowing department, shortly after seven o'clock called out the contestants for

THE DOUBLE-SCULL RACE.

They were F. Mercer and H. W. Kent, on the inside course; W. Matthews and J. J. Sheehy, on the centre course; and Geo. Stevenson and Arthur Stevenson on the outside course. At the word the boats got away well together. The clouds seemed to respond, too, for almost simultaneously the storm broke and down came the rain, accompanied by hail & gale. Matthews and Sheehy fell behind and sought shelter beneath the branches of a friendly tree, where the spectators assembled themselves. The press umbrella was pressed into service in earnest. The oarsmen were soon lost to view in the rattling rain. A friendly flash of lightning revealed them as they turned the buoys, well together. As they came up the home stretch the rain eased off, in opposition to the oarsmen who pulled harder. The Stevensons worked ahead and won by over a length, also winning glory and a good washing.

The rain having abated somewhat, the

was called. Mr. N. H. Ramer and F. Stenson, entered. "Go" was given and away they went. Noah's Ark shot ahead, it being propelled by an artistic stroke that denoted experience. At the turn, Ramer was considerably in the van. Stenson after turning his buoy, went fishing, or somewhere else, and allowed Mr. Ramer to win as he pleased.

THE FOUR OARED RACE

followed shortly after, the rain continuing to trouble the waters. The contesting crews were:

H. W. Kent.....stroke.....Geo. Stevenson.
W. Matthews.....third.....A. Stevenson.
F. Mercer.....second.....P. Henry.
J. McDonnell.....bow.....J. J. Sheehy.
W. McFarlane..cockswain.....R. Henry

In the start Kent's crew secured the start. Stevenson's kept close to them and they rowed over the course almost side by side, turning their buoys almost together, the first mentioned crew having the slightest lead. When nearing the finish Stevenson's crew spurted and were fast stealing ahead when the other crew followed suit, and by long and strong pulls, well together, forged ahead, winning by about a length. Throughout the race was well contested and was a pretty sight.

When the races were nicely over, so was the storm. The rain ceased to fall, the heavens cleared up and the band might have played "Way Down Upon the Swanee River."

The perseverance of the club in carrying out the programme in the face of such difficulties, shows that the members have plenty of pluck, which may serve on another occasion, to win for them laurels on the course.

—FRESH STRAWBERRIES, Tomatoes, Cucumbers, Cabbage, Squash, Pine Apples, Oranges, Lemons and Vegetables of all kinds just arrived, to be found at the Rochester Fruit Store. K. G. STONE.

Address and Presentation

From Peterborough Lodge of Oddfellows to Mrs. B. Cooney.

Several of the members of Peterborough Lodge of Oddfellows yesterday evening assembled at the residence of Mrs. B. Cooney, Ashburnham, who for the past number of years has been most friendly to the lodge in providing flowers on state occasions, and presented her with the following address, accompanied by a beautiful combination sugar bowl and spoon holder, and a dozen silver spoons:

Mrs. B. Cooney.

DEAR MADAM,—Peterborough Lodge, No. 111, I. O. O. F., have duly commissioned the undersigned to wait on you and in a formal manner thank you for your kind and skilful aid and assistance at our annual Decoration Day for the past four years.

In the name, therefore, of our lodge, we now offer to you our and their sincere thanks and hope you may long be spared to give us that skilful and highly valued assistance, which you have so cheerfully given in the past.

We ask you to accept this small token of our esteem in the spirit in which it is now tendered you.

And we beg to subscribe ourselves very respectfully yours,

R. W. ERSKINE,
A. McFARLANE,
WM. COWIE,
} Committee.

Mrs. Cooney, who was taken entirely by surprise, replied, thanking the Lodge for their beautiful present, and assured the Oddfellows of her kind feelings toward the Order and the Peterborough Lodge in particular. A pleasant evening was spent and the Oddfellows returned home well satisfied with the evening's proceedings.

Who is the "Monarch"— of Falsehood?

To the Editor of the EXAMINER:

SIR,—I notice in your columns of yesterday a deliberate falsehood about a great competition in musical instruments, into which my name and the instruments I sell have been falsely introduced, as I had no competition in either of the cases mentioned by Crosby. If I had had, he would have fared the same as in several other cases that I could mention, in one of which the purchaser had paid him a payment on an inferior instrument and returned it and bought from me. As regards my selling instruments below cost, I sell instruments on their own merits, consequently I don't have to pay any of Crosby's hirelings to recommend anything that I sell.
D. SMART.

Hog Cholera.

[illegible], Ill., July 21.—The cholera is raging [illegible] throughout the timber country south of here. Some farmers have lost every hog they owned. Cattle also have been attacked in some localities. The cattle die and people are attacked who use the milk and flesh of the sick animals.

Will Sir John Macdonald Resign?

Who Will be His Successor?

An Ottawa despatch to the Montreal Witness says: It is positively stated here this morning that Sir John Macdonald will resign the Premiership on his return from the Northwest. Ill-health is attributed the unexpected change in Canadian politics which this event will bring about. At a meeting of the Cabinet prior to Sir John's departure the matter was discussed as to who should succeed him. On this point the Cabinet were not united, but from what can be gathered the fight for leadership will be between Sir Hector Langevin and Sir Alexander Campbell.

Cardinal Taschereau.

The First Canadian Prince of the Church.

QUEBEC, July 21.—The ceremonial of conferring the beretta on Cardinal Taschereau took place here to-day. There was an immense attendance.

Archbishop Taché acted as celebrant of the solemn pontifical mass with Vicar-General Langevin, of Rimouski, as priest assistant, and Vicars-General Laurent, of Toronto, as deacon, and Routhier, of Ottawa, as sub-deacon. All that the gorgeous ritual of the Catholic Church could do to enhance its effectiveness lent its aid in that direction.

After the papal briefs had been read by Mgr. O'Brien, Archbishop Lynch of Toronto as apostolic legate placed the beretta on Cardinal Taschereau's head. His Eminence then retired and returned clothed in scarlet as a prince of the Holy Roman Church. On leaving the cathedral His Eminence received a tremendous ovation. In the evening a grand banquet was held in the Academy of Music.

Destitute Fishermen.

Terrible Condition of the Inhabitants of Labrador and Southern Newfoundland.

ST. JOHNS, N.F., 20.—A terible state of want exists among the people all along the northern coast of this island and in Labrador. Never before in the history of this locality has the northern ice extended so far south in such huge quantities. For 300 miles off from the coast the ice is firm and its presence keeps the temperature constantly at freezing point. From Cape Bauld, Newfoundland, to Cape Mugford, on the Labrador coast, there is one solid barrier of ice. No fishing has been possible, for no vessel has been able to approach or leave. The fish oil works are all idle, and the stored oil is being used for fuel. A large number of starving fishermen from Indian Harbour and Sandwich Bay have just arrived to implore food from the Government, and assistance for friends left behind. Two of the men died here last night shortly after their arrival. They had a terrible time getting here, and, having no boats crossed the strait on floating ice. With the winter setting in, and the frost will not then be out of the ground from last winter. On account of the lateness of the season no crops have been planted, and for several weeks past the unfortunate people have been living off their domestic animals. All the dogs and horses have been eaten. The Government at Ottawa has been notified. It is hoped that succour can be got over land before winter shuts up all the ports in the North-west Territory. Help must come soon, or Labrador will be depopulated.

OUR NATIVE BIRDS.

We are glad to see that the movement for the protection of American birds, recently started by the Ornithologists' Union, has been very generally taken up by both the daily and weekly press. It is only in this way that a public sentiment can be created against the present indiscriminate slaughter of birds, which characterizes every part of the country where the birds and man come in contact with each other. The classes to whom this appeal for the life of the innocent songsters must be made are so widely different that probably on no other issue could they be named in the same connection. It is odd that the first and strongest appeal must be made to those whom you would suppose to be the natural defenders of the birds, the women of the country.

Yet so remorseless has been the war which the gentler sex has—indubitably waged against these feathered visitors, that it has acquired the unenviable title of belonging to the "dead-bird wearing gender." It is estimated that five million birds are annually sacrificed for the personal decoration of the women of the United States. If every woman who contemplates decorating her next bonnet with stifled songsters would reflect that with thousands of others indulging in the same barbarous fancy, there will soon be no birds left to gratify either personal vanity or the better love of bird companionship before they have been rendered mute and lifeless, we think it would be easy to persuade her to substitute some more fitting decoration. Other causes are also helping to depopulate our groves and forests. Many birds which do not secure protection under the game laws now existing in nearly every State are being killed for food, and each year the list is extended. Our markets are already stocked with such great variety that there seems absolutely no excuse for this slaughter.

Not only are the adult birds destroyed, but the eggs are consumed in large quantities. And then there is the traditional small boy, whose instinct is to kill, if we are to believe what we are told—but there is another side to his nature. If his sympathies are once enlisted, he is a most loyal champion, and will do good battle in the cause to which he devotes himself.

Though the list of bird destroyers is by no means exhausted, we have space only to refer to one other class, those who collect for scientific purposes. This is perfectly legitimate, and requires a much less number of birds than is usually accredited to it. In all the museums of the country, both public and private, there cannot be more than half a million birds—one-tenth the number annually demanded for fashion. There are also egg collectors, whose apparent cruelty in robbing the nest of its treasured contents is entirely justified by the strictly scientific use to which the eggs are put. But there are just now numbers of pseudo-scientists all over the country, who are influenced simply by the prevalent mania for collecting anything and everything, without regard to their ability to make it valuable. These people kill birds by the score, and steal eggs by the dozen, and make a collection, but the absence of classification or an attempt at completeness prevents it from having any value whatever.

So many reasons conspire to make a plentiful bird life desirable, that the question of why we should protect it seems to answer itself. For purely utilitarian reason, as a check upon the insects harmful to vegetation, the birds deserve our protection. Even those birds which have themselves a bad reputation as garden marauders destroy more insect enemies than garden products. Not one can be shown to be wholly injurious.

And as a pleasing and beautiful form of natural life, nothing surpasses the sociable little house birds or the wilder dwellers in the woods. To have broad meadows and country lanes devoid of the cheerful song of birds and noisy only with the monotonous whir and buzz of insect life, would be to rob them of one of their greatest charms.

What Corsets Have Done.

"Take off your corset!"
I hear a howl of dismay.
"Oh, we can't live without corsets! We should fall to pieces!"
"I can't hold myself up an hour without corsets!"
"I always have such a pain in my side when I lay aside my corset!"
My dears, do you see what a severe accusation you bring against this article yourselves? Wearing corsets has so enfeebled your muscles that they are no longer of use to you. If you had never worn them your body, left to the laws of Him who made it, would have needed no support. I know one woman about 60 years old, tall, stout, well developed, who has never worn corsets or heels, and whose flesh is firm and cool, needing no bones to keep it in position except her own.

I suppose you can not undo wholly what the years of idle, foolish fortune have done for you, but you can have a better future if you will begin now to live like rational beings. Go and buy some of those well-made, new-fashioned waists, with buttons to hold up your heavy, draggy skirts; buy them big enough so that you can draw the longest breath your squeezed and disabled lungs will allow after the waist is burst; so loose that you can lift your arm above your head easily; if your side or your back aches lie down: rub your flabby flesh every day with a rough cloth wrung out in salt and water; draw your breath in as far as you can, and breathe it out as slowly as you can every time the clock strikes.—Rose Terry Cooke.

One of the curiosities of light and heat is the fact that rays of the sun should pass through a cake of ice without melting it at all, as is the case, when the thermometer stands a little above zero. That the rays of heat naturally penetrate the ice is shown by the fact that a lens of ice may be used for setting fire to inflammable substances.

CIVIL SERVICE ABUSES.

Mr. Chagnon, who is the nominee of Sir Hector Langevin, for the House of Commons, in Chambly, P. Q., and who is heartily endorsed by Mr. Chapleau, another Dominion Minister, makes some grave charges in regard to immortality in the civil service. In the report of his speech made at Longueil, appear these serious statements:

He was opposed to young girls being employed in the Government buildings at Ottawa. He denounced the system used in engaging them a system which, for the ministers, consisted less of assuring themselves of the aptitude and intellectual capacities of the girls than of their physical qualities and beauty. He condemned the system all the more from the fact that the young girls had to work near darkened rooms, which are on both sides of the corridors of the House and which the ministers frequent in attending to their duties. He would give the subject ampler explanations only for the presence of so many ladies.

There's your true Tory spirit. The Conservative candidate hints that grave moral improperties exist between certain young ladies of the Civil Service Department and Cabinet Ministers, and advises that the girls, as Civil Service clerks, get their walking papers. Fair play and chivalry towards the sex, would suggest that the better way would be to discharge the Cabinet Ministers, who may, as more than darkly hinted, take advantage of their positions to terrorise girls dependent on their good word for the retention of their places, into compliance with improper advances. One can now (if the charges made be true, and a supporter of the Government makes them) understand the opposition of ministers to Mr. Charlton's bill making seduction a criminal offence. The candidate's charges in their generality are said to be a gross slander on the young ladies of the Civil Service Department, but it is admitted that the names of two or three have been connected with indiscreet conduct. But these should not alone be punished. If they are discharged, bundle out the ministers inculpated along with them. The Ottawa Free Press, certainly a good authority, denies Mr. Chagnon's wholesale slanders of the female civil service employes, stating that there are two or three, however, that "have been talked about," and goes on to speak as follows:—

"The true remedy is to remove the immoral cabinet ministers. All men are not so immoral as Mr. Chagnon intimates the Tory cabinet ministers whom he wants to support in Parliament are; and the best thing to do as a remedy, is to substitute moral men in their places. Because one or two women are accused of indiscretions with cabinet ministers, Mr. Chagnon wants the employment of female civil servants discontinued and abolished, but that of the immoral cabinet ministers continued. He might as well demand the abolition of matrimony because there are occasionally unfaithful husbands and wives."

THE Executive Committee of the Toronto City Council has whittled down the estimates till they can be covered by a rate of 16½ mills on the dollar.

THE revised Dominion voters' list for the city of Ottawa, contains 9,600, of which 500 are repeaters, making the bona fide list 9,100. there are 51 polling subdivisions as against 26 at the last Dominion election.

MR. CHAGNON is authority for the statement that the Dominion Cabinet Ministers select girls for the Civil Service, because of their beautiful faces and facts show that men are selected because of their boodle-ful capacities.

THE Toronto News has a special despatch announcing that Sir John Macdonald will resign the leadership of the Conservative party. After the farewell address hoax of last spring the "specials" of the News will naturally be taken with a generous pinch of salt. The matter of succession is a fight between Sir Hector Langevin and Sir Alex Campbell for the retiring chieftain's shoes. Whether or not the report of the News is reliable, there is little trouble in fixing the date of the Premier's retirement—immediately after the Dominion general elections.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

After the gentlemen had left them, when Miss Hastings began to speak eagerly of the loss, Pauline raised her hand with a proud gesture.

"I have heard enough," she said. "I do not wish to hear one word more."

The robbery created a great sensation; inspectors came from Audleigh Royal, and a detective from Scotland Yard, but no one could throw the least light upon the subject. The notes could not be traced; they had been paid in from different sources, and no one had kept a list of the numbers.

Even the detective seemed puzzled. Sir Oswald had locked up the notes in the box at night, he had kept the keys in his own possession, and he had found in the morning that the box was still locked and the notes were gone. It was a nine days' wonder. Captain Langton gave all the help he could, but as all search seemed useless and hopeless, it was abandoned after a time, and at the end of the week Captain Langton was summoned to London, and all hope of solving the mystery was relinquished.

CHAPTER XXI.

FULFILLING THE CONTRACT.

The preparations for the wedding went on with great activity; the rooms prepared for the bride were a marvel of luxury and beauty. There was a boudoir with rose-silk and white-lace hangings, adorned with most exquisite pictures and statues, with rarest flowers and most beautiful ornaments—a little fairy nook, over which every one went into raptures except Pauline; she never mentioned them nor showed the least interest in them. She went on in her cold, proud, self-contained manner, hiding many thoughts in her heart.

"Miss Hastings," Sir Oswald one morning, "you can do me a favor. Sir Oswald has been saying that we must call at the Elms to see Lady Hampton and Miss Rocheford. I should rather that the request exactly suits my plans. I wish to see Miss Rocheford; we will drive over this afternoon. Will you engage Lady Hampton in conversation while I talk to her alone?"

"I will do anything you wish, Pauline," returned Miss Hastings; "but, my dear child, be prudent. I am frightened for you—be prudent. It will be worse than useless for you to make an enemy of the future Lady Darrell. I would do anything to help you, anything to shield you from sorrow or harm, but I am frightened on your account."

Caresses and demonstrations of affection were very rare with Pauline; but now she bent down with a shuddering face and kissed the anxious brow.

"You are very good to me," she said. "You are the only one in the wide world who cares for me."

And with the words there came to her such a sense of loneliness and desolation as no language could describe. Of what use had been her beauty, of which her poor father had been so proud—of what avail the genius with which she was so richly dowered?

No one loved her. The only creature living who seemed to enter into either her joys or her sorrows was the kind-hearted, gentle governess.

"You must let me have my own way this time, Miss Hastings. One peculiarity of the Darrells is that they must say what is on their minds. I intend to do so now; it rests with you whether I do it in peace or not."

After that Miss Hastings knew all further remonstrance was useless. She made such arrangements as Pauline wished, and that afternoon they drove over to the Elms. Lady Hampton received them very kindly; the great end and aim of her life was accomplished—her niece was to be Lady Darrell, of Darrell Court. There was no need for any more envy or jealousy of Pauline. The girl who had so lately been a dangerous rival and an enemy to be dreaded had suddenly sunk into complete insignificance. Lady Hampton even thought it better to be gracious, conciliatory, and kind; as Elinor had to live with Miss Darrell, it was useless to make things disagreeable.

So Lady Hampton received them kindly. Fruit from the Court hothouses and flowers from the Court conservatories were on the table. Lady Hampton insisted that Miss Hastings should join her in her afternoon tea, while Pauline, speaking with haughty grace, expressed a desire to see the Elms garden.

Lady Hampton was not sorry to have an hour's gossip with Miss Hastings, and she desired Elinor to show Miss Darrell all their choicest flowers.

Elinor looked half-frightened at the task. It was wonderful to see the contrast that the two girls presented—Pauline tall, slender, queenly, in her sweeping black dress, all passion and magnificence; Miss Rocheford, fair, dainty, golden-haired, and gentle.

They walked in silence down one of the garden-paths, and then Miss Rocheford said, in her low, sweet voice:

"If you like roses, Miss Darrell, I can show you a beautiful collection."

Then for the first time Pauline's dark eyes were directed toward her companion's face.

"I am a bad dissembler, Miss Rocheford," he said, proudly. "I have no wish to see your flowers. I came here to see you. There is a seat under yonder tree. Come with me, and hear what I have to say."

Elinor followed, looking and feeling terribly frightened. What had this grand, imperious Miss Darrell to say to her? They sat down side by side under the shade of a large magnolia tree, the white blossoms of which filled the air with sweetest perfume; the smiling summer beauty rested on the landscape. They sat in silence for some minutes, and then Pauline turned to Elinor.

"Miss Rocheford," she said, "I am come to give you a warning—the most solemn warning you have ever received—one that if you have any common sense you will not refuse to heed. I hear that you are going to marry my uncle, Sir Oswald. Is it true?"

"Sir Oswald has asked me to be his wife," Elinor replied, with downcast eyes and a faint blush.

Pauline's face gleamed with scorn.

"There is no need for any of those pretty airs and graces with me," she said. "I am going to speak stern truths to you. You, a young girl, barely twenty, and all your life before you—surely you cannot be so obtuse as even to pretend that you are marrying an old man like my uncle for love! You know it is not so—you dare not even pretend it."

Elinor's face flushed crimson.

"Why do you speak so to me, Miss Darrell?" she gasped.

"Because I stand to WED, you do not understand. I stand to WIN—to sell what you are doing. You do not love Sir Oswald.—How should you? He is more than old enough to be your father. If he were a poor man, you would laugh his offer to scorn; but he is old and rich, and you are willing to marry him to become Lady Darrell, of Darrell Court. Can you, Elinor Rocheford, look me frankly in the face, and say it is not so?"

No, she could not. Every word fell like a sledgehammer on her heart, and she knew it was all true. She bent her crimson face, and hid it from Pauline's clear gaze.

"Are you not ashamed to sell yourself? If no truth, no honor, no loyalty impels you to end this barter, let fear step in. You do not love my uncle. It can give you no pain to give him up. Pursue your present course, and I warn you, Darrell Court ought to be mine. I am a Darrell, and when my uncle took me home it was as his heiress. For a long period I have learned to consider Darrell Court as mine. It is mine," she continued—"mine by right, for I am a Darrell—mine by right of the great love I bear it—mine by every law that is just and right! Elinor Rocheford, I warn you, before how you step in between me and my birthright—beware! My uncle is only marrying you to punish me; he has no other motive. Beware how you lend yourself to such punishment! I am not asking you to give up any love. If you loved him, I would not say one word; but it is not a matter of love—only of sale and barter. Give it up!"

"How can you talk so strangely to me, Miss Darrell? I cannot give it up; everything is arranged."

"You can if you will. Tell my uncle you repent of the unnatural compact you have made. Be a true woman—true to the instinct Heaven has placed in your heart. Marry for love, nothing else—pure, honest love—and then you will live and die happy. Answer me—will you give it up?"

"I cannot," murmured the girl.

"You will not, rather. Listen to me. I am a true Darrell, and a Darrell never breaks a vow once pledged. If you marry my uncle, I pledge my word that I will take a terrible vengeance on you—not a commonplace one, but one that shall be terrible. I will be revenged upon you if you dare to step in between me and my just inheritance! Do you hear me?"

"I hear. You are very cruel, Miss Darrell. You know that I cannot help myself. I must fulfill my contract."

"Very well," said Pauline, rising; "then I have no more to say. But remember, I have given you full, fair, honest warning. I will be revenged upon you."

And Miss Darrell returned to the house, with haughty head proudly raised, while Elinor remained in the garden, bewildered and aghast.

Two things happened. Elinor never revealed a word of what had transpired, and three weeks from that day Sir Oswald Darrell married her in the old parish church of Audleigh Royal.

From its wonderful power over this terribly fatal disease, when offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, laxative, or positive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all

There seems to be some misapprehension relative to the price of Flour. I find a number of purchasers stating that the grade of Flour known as

St. John's Excursion.

The excursion of St. John's congregation Sunday School, to Norwood, yesterday, afforded a splendid day's outing to those who availed themselves of the trip. Train left about 12.30, carrying about three hundred excursionists, who took every opportunity to amuse themselves. On arriving at Norwood, the party proceeded to Grover's beautiful grove, the residence of Rev. Mr. Gibson, where they engaged in the usual pic-nic sports. During the afternoon a sumptuous dinner was disposed of in the most approved method. Everything passed off pleasantly, and all seemed to enjoy the outing. The party returned in time to miss the storm.

Mission School Pic-nic.

The children of the Dalhousie Street Mission School pic-nicked at the residence of Mr. W. W. Johnston yesterday. The children, numbering about 80, assembled at one o'clock when the fun commenced. A large list of sports was run off, affording great amusement to all. The "daisy" field opposite Mr. Johnston's place was used during the day, and a splendid time was spent. In the evening a pic-nic tea was provided, which was one of the most attractive features of the occasion. The conduct of the children was remarkably good throughout, for which they deserve great credit. Several of the parents of the children were present and assisted in entertaining them.

Oddfellows and Sons of England.

From Port Perry Visit the Town—Reception by the Local Oddfellows and Sons of England—Excursionists Entertained by the Ladies on Reaching the Park.

This morning, about 9.30, a special train carrying the Sons of England and the Oddfellows' excursion from Port Perry arrived in town. The party, numbering about five hundred, all arrayed in holiday attire, soon thronged the platform, where Reception Committees, from Otonabee and Peterborough Lodges of Oddfellows and Lansdowne Lodge, Sons of England, met the excursionists, to give the visiting brethren and their friends a hearty reception. The Reception Committees were composed as follows: Otonabee Lodge.—T. Workman, N. G.; C. J. Samuels, P. G., R. C. [illegible], S. D. H. Wilson, H. W. Wilson, E. H. Henderson, Mr. Wright and John Nugent. Peterborough Lodge.—A. McFarlane, D.D., J. Clarke, P.G., J. Fraser, N.G., W. Galley, D.G., R. W. Errett, R.S., J. Sawers, P.S., S. Clegg, T.

Lansdowne Lodge, S. O. E.—W. Brundrette, R. Tivey, T. Brownstoombe, T. E. Pratt, H. Manley, J. Braden, T. Gunn, F. S. Sherwood, G. Gibson, T. Roberts, E. Mannell, W. Barlow and F. Mitchell. These, headed by the splendid band of Warner Lodge, 75, Port Perry, with Mr. Brydon at its head, led the way to the Central Park and drill shed. Here Mayor Stevenson mounted the platform, and in a short speech to the town, and informed them that the drill shed and park were entirely at their disposal for pic-nic purposes. He hoped they would have a pleasant time, which he would do all in his power to provide. Mr. [illegible] B. Sproule, on behalf of the Oddfellows, welcomed the excursionists and informed them that the lodge rooms of Peterborough and Otonabee lodges were entirely at their disposal.

Mr. W. Brundrette, on behalf of the Lansdowne Sons of England, welcomed the excursionists and invited them to visit the S. O. E. lodge rooms. The majority of the excursionists then proceeded to Otonabee and Peterborough Oddfellows' and the Sons of England's lodge rooms, where were again extended. Capt. Shaw, on behalf of the Port Perry Oddfellows, responded, thanking the Oddfellows, the Sons of England, and the citizens generally, for their hearty reception, while Dr. Jones (in the S. O. E. rooms,) in responding to Mr. Brundrette's speech, thanked the Sons of England for their generous welcome. In the S. O. E. rooms, cheers for "the Queen," "the Sons of England," "the Oddfellows," "the Ladies' and "Peterborough," were given.

A large number of the excursionists visited the Court House Park where they spent some hours in inspecting its romantic beauties, while all joined in visiting the many places of interest around the town, including the cemetery, the Nicholls Hospital, Barnardo Home, the Stove Works, Lock Works, the Wm. Hamilton and Peter Hamilton Works.

During the whole day merry visitors paraded the streets, seemingly enjoying themselves immensely.

DOING THE TOWN.

The majority of the excursionists put up at the hotels where ample accommodation was provided. During the afternoon the Oddfellows and Sons of England engaged all the cabs and rigs available and drove their visiting brethren and their friends around town. The Port Perry Band gave a concert in the pavilion in the Court House Park which attracted a large crowd. The band was finally captured by some official Oddfellows or Sons of England and were whirled away to see the sights. They discoursed music as they travelled to the delight of the residents. The town seemed given up to pleasure, and those who did not enjoy themselves may blame themselves.

At the service in the Port Hope Methodist Church, on Sunday evening last, the pastor of the congregation stated the case of Rev. Mr. Hall, of Vancouver, B. C., who lost everything in the recent great fire in that city, and at once a collection of $110 for his relief was taken.

While a clerk in a Port Hope liquor store was in the cellar of the establishment getting some brown Japan from a barrel, the lantern ignited the gases arising from the Japan and the barrel was instantly a mass of flames. Damage to the amount of about $75 was done before the blaze could be extinguished.

St. Thomas, June 23, 1886.

THE JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and as I am now able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat.

Yours truly,
W. H. COX.

From the Pacific to Peterborough.

An Old Former Resident, Sheriff Armstrong, of New Westminster, British Columbia, visits the Scenes of His Youth—Climate and Resources of the Pacific Province—The Overland Journey.

On Thursday evening, as announced in yesterday's issue, Hon. W. J. Armstrong, of the city of New Westminster, British Columbia, arrived in town. It is thirty-four years since Mr. Armstrong left this part of the country for the other side of the continent. He is a native of the town of Peterborough, having been born here in 1826. His father, Wm. Armstrong, was one of the pioneer residents and business men of Peterborough. He carried on business in a store in connection with John Brown, of Port Hope. Through family affliction Mr. Armstrong, Sr., removed to his farm in Cavan, in 1839, living there till 1851, when he removed with his family to California, at the time of the prevalence of the gold fever. In 1858 the outbreak of the gold mining excitement found the Armstrong family among the arrivals in British Columbia. Hon. Mr. Armstrong built the first house in New Westminster, and established the first mercantile business house. Of course he advanced with the city, which is now a place of three or four thousand inhabitants and a flourishing commercial community, whose importance will be greatly increased and its growth promoted by the completion, in about two weeks, of a branch line of the C. P. R. Hon. Mr. Armstrong has taken an active part in provincial politics. He was a member of the De Cosmos and Walkem Cabinets, holding the portfolio of Finance and Agriculture. In 1863 he held office as Provincial Secretary in the Semlin Government. In 1864 he resigned and accepted the shrievalty of the New Westminster judicial district, an office he still retains. Hon. Mr. Armstrong speaks in high terms of British Columbia. The country is not an agricultural one to any great extent. In the Westminster district, however, there are large tracts of fine land from twenty to sixty miles in width. In the valleys there are considerable areas of farming land bordering the rivers. The chief wealth consists in minerals, and of the immense wealth in this respect of this province, the half has not been told, nor is it known. The completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway by making access easier, will give a great impetus to the development of the inexhaustible mineral wealth locked up in its rocky vaults. Nor are minerals such as coal, gold and other precious metals the Pacific province's only wealth. Its products consist also of fish, furs and the finest timber in the world.

The climate of British Columbia is mild, though of wide range, varying from tropical mildness to fur-bearing severity. In the Lillooet District the climate is almost tropical, fruits peculiar to the outer limits of the torrid belt, being produced abundantly. In other parts there is great cold, dependent upon elevation. There is a marked absence of the severe meterological phenomena, common to other parts of the continent. There is an almost entire absence of storms, cyclones, rains and thunderstorms. During a residence of twenty-eight years, Mr. Armstrong cannot recall half a dozen thunderstorms, as severe as that which greeted him on his arrival in his native country, Thursday night.

British Columbia is one of the finest fruit producing countries on the continent. It is inferior to California in this respect, in the matter of peaches only, but the superiority of its magnificent apple products restores the balance. In Ontario the ground producing area is chiefly confined to the small portion lying south of a line marked by the southern shore of Lake Ontario.

The social condition of the country in New Westminster and district is of a high order. The people are peaceable and law-abiding and quietly pursue the even tenor of their ways.

Mr. Armstrong and party left Port Moody at [illegible] o'clock on Monday, [illegible] could have been in Ottawa on Tuesday evening, July 20th, at 4 o'clock a.m., making the time in 5½ days. The train accommodations [illegible] and the track in good order, there [illegible] distance on the Lake Superior section, which is however rapidly being [illegible] corresponding with the rest of the line.

Rossiter Attacked and Beaten.

Struck from Behind by an Unknown and Knocked Down—He Revives His Recollection and is Prevented from Going in—A Free Fight.

This afternoon, about one o'clock, Mr. Rossiter, employed by the Local Scott Act Association, as inspector or informer, was severely beaten. For some time he had been walking up and down Water street, passing Cavanagh's hotel on his beat. He and Mr. Cavanagh managed to get into an altercation on Scott Act. Mr. Cavanagh told Rossiter he did not want him around. Rossiter claimed that there was nothing to prevent him from going where he pleased. Cavanagh said "Oh, go away," and shoved Rossiter from him. A number of men who were in the bar came out and a crowd soon gathered. Mr. Rossiter dared any one of them to put him off the corner. He had no sooner spoken than a man who stood near and partly behind him, struck him behind the ear, knocking him off the side walk to the road. Before he could rise on or two others joined in the assault and rained blows and kicks upon Rossiter when he was down. Rossiter retaliated by kicking one of his assailants in the face and the others wherever he could reach. Mr. Mitchell, harnessmaker, left his shop and after arming himself with a club,

A HEAVY BLOW

WENT TO THE RESCUE.

He had no sooner entered the crowd than a rough in the party gave him a blow on the side of the face that knocked him down, and he had to be helped back to his shop.

Rossiter managed to regain his feet, and putting his hand in his pocket he drew his revolver, and, it is said, cocked it. Mr. Conroy, who says he did not want to see blood shed, grappled Rossiter from behind and carried him out to the centre of the road, during which action Rossiter kicked him on the shins, without regard to blood or bark. An pressed around the besieged informer, but he put his hand on his revolver and defied them to do their worst, and cried "Hurrah for the Scott Act!" The crowd began to enquire of each other how the fracas had originated and the excitement abated.

Rossiter was cut about the face and must have been bruised by kicks. However he walked off triumphantly, followed by admirers.

Chief Cooper arrived on the scene but did not make any arrests as the principals had departed and were not to be found.

The Piano Controversy.

To the Editor of THE DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR.—Please allow me to correct Mr. Smart's statement in reply to Monarch. I can afford to be called a liar as I am confident that a remark of that kind by Mr. Smart is sufficient evidence that I am not. I have never been beaten in any case of competition in Peterborough. In the one alluded to Mr. Smart's Piano was on trial for five days, and rejected on account of its reputation and the numerous falsehoods told while trying to sell it. Perhaps Mr. Smart will tell us why he took the organ away from a poor woman and her little boy after they had paid $40 on it. I hope he will not provoke me to tell you why he felt so thirsty when adjusting covers on the split piano lid. If he had the slightest indication of modesty he would be the last man to speak of hirelings in the piano trade.

Yours truly,
J. W. CROSBY.

Crop Prospects.

From Good Authority—Peterborough Prospects Promising.

Mr. W. H. Wrighton, produce and commission merchant, of town, has received the subjoined letter from Mr. R. H. Lawder, of Whitby, giving the crop prospects of Ontario, and parts of East York and West Durham counties. Mr. Lawder is an authority on such matters and his reports are valuable. The following is the letter:

W. H. Wrighton, Esq., Peterborough,

DEAR SIR,—Barley harvest in this section fairly commenced, quite a number of fields have been cut and are being cut. Harvest will be in full operation next week.

I have lately been all over this county and through parts of East York and West Durham. I find the increase in barley acreage there fully 25 per cent. over last year. Everywhere the crop looks promising. Yields will be over average. Weather next two weeks will determine quality. From some sections east and west, reports are not so favorable.

Fall wheat none worth mentioning. Little sown and that a failure. Spring wheat about half the usual acreage, present prospects good. Peas a large breadth, sown and look splendidly. Oats usual acreage, look well.

Would be pleased to hear your report as to Peterborough and Victoria.

Yours truly,
R. H. LAWDER.

Whitby, July 21, 1886.

Mr. W. H. Wrighton, who has made a personal inspection and farm to farm observation of the crops in this section, and who is in a position to give reliable intelligence on the subject, gives the following information with regard to the crops in this county:—Fall wheat about the average acreage; a particularly fine crop, berry very plump. Spring wheat promises well and was much improved by the recent rains. Barley also promises to be a fine crop, the yield being large and and the berry plump; favourable weather will give a good color. Oats are a good crop and peas are an extra fine crop. Hay is about the average. Roots look well and promise an abundant yield. Altogether the prospects of an abundant harvest are very promising. It will be seen that whereas, the fall wheat is the exception mentioned by Mr. Lawder is a failure, the crop in Peterborough county is exceptionally good.

A Vista From Lookout Mountain.

A Tennessee correspondent of the Albany Journal writes: For a moderate fee my companion and I were paddled across Chattahooga creek, which is ordinarily a narrow stream, but which had now stretched to a width of two miles. Landing at the foot of Lookout Mountain, we tramped up its steep sides to the summit by the grade of the new incline railway which is being constructed. It was a tiresome walk to one unused to it, but was well worth the trouble. Passing around the base of the perpendicular cliff on the south side of the mountain, known as Point Lookout, we hailed a man who was peering down upon us, and by the use of the ladder which he lowered and the expenditure of $5 came each we were soon standing on this [illegible] eminence, gasping in raptures at the magnificent view which spread itself out like a panorama before us.

"There is no grander outlook in the world than that presented from the summit of these cliffs, either for the lover of nature or the student of American history. At this time, however, the whole aspect of the surrounding country was changed by the prevailing floods. Chattanooga was undergoing another siege, communication being cut off on every hand, not by armed men, but by the angry waters. The tremendous flood, extending far up the Chattanooga valley, between Lookout and Missionary ridge, with the hundreds of submerged buildings, presented a wild scene. Farther to the east, looking over Missionary ridge, Chickamauga creek could be seen widened into an immense river, and by the aid of a field-glass many pretty residences could be seen nearly covered with water. Looking towards the northeast as far as the eye could reach, we could see the swelled current of the Tennessee come rushing out from among the mountains, bearing on its bosom an immense mass of driftwood, among which was occasionally mingled a frame building that had been torn from its foundation, the remnants of a demoralized timber raft, the body of some unfortunate horse or cow, and various other property of value. The tide swept westward past the northern limit of Missionary ridge, making a sharp turn southward around Cameron hill, and after a furious onslaught at the base of Lookout again abruptly turned to the west and north, around Moccasin bend, and plunged out of sight between the hills. The proper channel of the river could be distinguished by the tops of the trees along its margin, which were just putting on their green mantles. The angry flood laved the foot of the Raccoon mountains, and the backwaters flooded the valley to the west over which Gen. Joe Hooker's gallant army marched on that memorable day (Nov. 25, 1863), and clambering up the steep western side of old Lookout, under cover of the morning mist, fought the great battle among the clouds. Far below us to the left could be seen a square green patch on which a farm-house is located, now an island, being entirely surrounded by water. This is the eminence which was occupied as the headquarters of Gen. Hooker during the noted battle. Immediately back of where we stand is Pulpit rock, from the summit of which the signal waved announcing the great victory. In fancy we can hear the answering shouts from the thousands of exultant heroes who were resting their tired bodies along the mountain slopes, and far below, over the valley toward Missionary ridge.

Uncle Sam's Conscience Fund.

In the vaults of the United States Treasury at Washington there is the sum of $220,746.26, which is entered upon the books of the Treasurer as "Miscellaneous receipts from persons unknown," and which sum constitutes what is known as the "Conscience Fund," as it is supposed to come from people who have at some time defrauded the government and who wish to make restitution by refunding the amounts of their peculations.

"This conscience fund," said a Treasury official, "has been steadily increasing for sixty years, until now it reaches the enormous sum of nearly $250,000. The first money of the kind received by the Treasury was $380 received in 1827 from an unknown person, who explained in his letter that he was refunding for some custome he had once defrauded the government of. Since that time remittances of all amounts ranging from 8 cents to $2,500 have been coming in. They come from all over the country, and even from foreign lands.

"A great deal of this money is received from priests and ministers who write that some sinner in their parish requested them to send it in. During the small-pox epidemic in Canada a Catholic priest sent us a draft for $60 which a dying Canadian had given him, confessing to have stolen that amount from the United States government, but not giving the details. Frequently nothing accompanies the remittance to indicate what it is for, but generally a line or two of explanation is given.

"Another time we received a letter containing four 2 cent stamps, but not a line of explanation. This, I believe, is the smallest contribution ever sent in. Another letter, postmarked at Kansas City, was received, inclosing ten $5 bills, with a note saying, 'This money belongs to the government.'

"In January we received an official envelope postmarked at New York, and containing $2,500 in bills—one of $1,000, two of $500 and five of $100. They were all cut in two, with a small piece cut from the center, and the word 'cancelled' written across the face. A note inclosed ran thus:

"'Here are $2,500 in United States bills, mutilated so as to insure the government's getting the money. Whatsoever a man sows that shall he reap. I have sowed the wind, and am reaping the whirlwind. This is next to the last payment due. God grant me a speedy release.'

"We had received $500 dollars from New York shortly before, and circumstances connected with the remittance indicated that they were both from the same party."—N. Y. Sun.

The G. O. M. and Mr. Parnell.

LONDON, July 22.—Mr. Gladstone indirectly advised Mr. Parnell against pursuing an obstruction policy in the coming Parliament. Mr. Parnell replied that he is desirous of following Mr. Gladstone's lead, reserving entire liberty of action in the event of the Tories trying coercion.

Great Heat in Europe.

A remarkable heat wave is passing over England, accompanied by disastrous thunder storms. At Liverpool the river overflowed and two persons were drowned. Severe storms with loss of life are reported in France. Lightning destroyed the Dansette Spinnery at Armentieres, causing damage to the extent of 12,500,000 francs ($2,500,000). In Paris the heat is excessive. Extraordinary sanitary precautions are being taken by the authorities there.

Irish Literature for Political Students.

Mr. Gladstone, replying to-day to inquiries as to which was the best books to read on the historical side of the Irish question, said that at present there was a great lack of complete work. He recommends Goldwin Smith's article on Pitt in his "English Statesmen;" also Lockey's "Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland" and "History of England in the Eighteenth Century;" also many portions of Froude's "The English in Ireland in the Eighteenth Century" and Lord Cnoclurry's "Personal Recollections of His Lifetime, with Extracts from his Correspondence," but above all, Burke, especially his writings in America as applicable to Ireland. As regards the recent history of the land question, Mr. Gladstone recommends the perusal of Barry O'Brien's articles in the Nineteenth Century.

Canada's Chartered Banks.

There are in the Dominion forty-three chartered banks, of which thirteen are in Ontario, fifteen in Quebec, nine in Nova Scotia, four in New Brunswick, and one each in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia. The total authorized capital is $81,479,666, of which $66,199,799 has been subscribed and $62,360,134 is paid up. This is a good showing, but the figures which apply to Ontario and Quebec are better still; of a total authorized capital of $60,316,666 there are $53,945,537 paid up. The reserve fund foots up $18,125,141. The premises occupid are generally among the most substantial to be found in the town or city where they are located, and these are valued at $3,512,830. The figures showing the amount of business done are also of considerable interest. The banks above mentioned on the 31st of May had in circulation $28,900,765 of their own notes, and held deposits, outside of those made by the Government, aggregating $100,792,630, of which $49,348,207 was on demand, and $51,434,423 payable after notice. The total liabilities were $145,569,433. On the asset side of the account there was specie to the amount of $6,829,091; Dominion notes and notes and cheques of other banks, $17,607,537, and Dominion stock and foreign securities, $7,780,810. Current loans, discounts and advances to the public amounted to $132,336,593, which, with the items just given and a number of others of the security class, brings the total assets up to $228,127,418. A difference of assets over liabilities is thus shown of $82,537,985, a statement that must be regarded as eminently encouraging. The standing of our banks is, beyond dispute, first class. The growth of business transacted by each has been steady and satisfactory.

HOW THE PICKET QUAILED.

An Amusing Adventure on the Advance Line During the Late War.

One cold and cloudy night in the early part of the winter of 1862 Bill —— was on picket at an outpost near the little "Brick Church" known to comrades of the Army of the Potomac as "Hartwoods." He had backed his mare into the edge of a piece of woods, from which he had a view of a large open field in his front; to his right at a short distance was a road leading to "Kelley's Ford" and one to Warrenton. In the vicinity of these cross-roads there had been at divers times shots fired at pickets in the night by unseen persons (guerrillas), which caused the pickets to be more vigilant than in the daylight. Not more than half an hour had elapsed since the comrade whom Bill had relieved had left and returned to the "reserve," some half-mile distant, when Bill's ear caught the sound of stealthy treading upon the dry twigs and dead leaves directly in the rear of where he was posted.

It was a common thing in those days, in that part of the country, for hogs to be seen running at large in and around the woods, consequently at the first sound of this treading that reached his ears Bill paid no heed, thinking it was a hog rooting for acorns. Presently the same noise was heard. At this second interruption his mare pricked up her ears and made an uneasy shake of her head, as was her custom when on such duty and any strange noise reached her keen ear. At this uneasiness of his dumb companion Bill stroked her silky neck to assure her he was on the alert. Again the noise had ceased, but Bill had made a knot in his bridle rein and pinned it over the pommel of his saddle, examined his carbine near the hammer, put his hand to his holster to make sure the revolver was in a handy position, and assuring himself that all was right as regards firearms, cautiously peered into the darkness on all sides in hopes that he might discern the intruder of his quietness.

Again was heard the mysterious treading sound! Bill pressed the sides of his mare with his legs, and she instantly wheeled "right about" and faced the woods.

"Halt! Who comes there?" Bill called aloud. All was as quiet as the tomb.

There sat Bill facing the woods, with a deadly aim of his carbine in the direction from which the sounds had come, feeling as though he weighed 200 pounds (actual weight 135) and could blow any three "guerrillas" out of existence. Once more he heard those steps so lightly crushing the twigs and leaves.

Click! went the hammer of the carbine.

Whir-r-r! whir-r-r! sounded the rush of the unseen bodies. The mare raised herself and struck at vacant space with her fore feet. Bill felt his hair standing on end, as he grasped the butt of his revolver, and waited the expected attack.

The discharge of the carbine had aroused the "reserve," and the sound of galloping horses' feet and the clanging of sabres against the riders' spurs Bill distinctly heard as the "reserve patrol" drew nearer and nearer to his rescue. He could hear the pickets on his left challenging the horsemen as they approached their posts.

Presently he heard his nearest comrade inform the sergeant that "Bill had been shot or had fired at some d—d guerrilla."

He had faced the mare once again toward the open field, and was quietly laughing to himself as he stroked the neck of his faithful companion.

"Halt! Who comes there?" Bill was heard to again call forth.

"Sorgeant with 'ploket patrol!'" was the reply.

"Dismount, sergeant! Advance and give the countersign!"

The order was obeyed and an explanation made. The patrol was notified to advance, and when Bill's comrades came to where the sergeant and Bill were they found them enjoying a hearty laugh over the alarm caused by a flock of "quail."—Grand Army Review.

Getting Even with the Ferryman.

A funny story was told me regarding one of those doughty knights of the sheep-shears and brand-iron who flourished in the wilds of southern Georgia in the olden time. His name was Wayne and a great and good man was he. There were but fourteen men in his county and twelve of them were his sons. As a matter of course he had a walk-over at the election and came out with flying colors, a duly elected member of the Georgia legislature. He owned the swiftest nag in those parts and he was always in the lead when the cavalcade of solons rode toward Milledgeville.

One time, however, he was late. The legislature had been in session three days, and all were getting anxious regarding the Hon. Mr. Wayne. At length, just as they were discussing the propriety of appointing a committee of inquiry, Wayne came riding over the hill driving a great flock of geese ahead of him. The house adjourned to investigate the matter, and as soon as the quackers were corralled the old man explained:

"Ye see," said he, "when I wus up here to Milledgeville last session turkeys wus awful scarce, so I decided to bring some on speculation this trip. I bought a whole passel, and when I got as fur as the Ocmulgee that rascally ferryman wanted to charge me ferryage. So I jest tuck 'em right back to my settlement and swapped 'em for geese, so that I could get even with that ferryman. He was obliged to put me over free, and I jest made the geese swim it. I hain't a-goin' to let 'em swindle me as long as I can help it."—Atlanta Constitution.

Anglomaniacs in New York are divided in regard to the future of Fifth avenue. Some of them insist that it is to be the Piccadilly of New York, while others are equally sure that it is to be a second edition of the Strand. They think of holding a convention on the subject. In the meanwhile tailors and modistes seem to be taking possession of many blocks of the avenue, some of them having come directly from "Lunnon, ya knaw."

A question likely soon to come to the fore is the practibility of tunneling between England and Ireland. At one point the distance is under twenty-two miles.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

CHAPTER XXII.

NO COMPROMISE WITH PAULINE.

It was evident to Miss Hastings that Sir Oswald felt some little trepidation in bringing his bride home. He had, in spite of himself, been somewhat impressed by his niece's behavior. She gave no sign of disappointed greed or ambition, but she bore herself like one who has been unjustly deprived of her rights.

On the night of the arrival every possible preparation had been made for receiving the baronet and his wife. The servants, under the direction of Mr. Frampton, the butler, were drawn up in stately array. The bells from the old Norman church of Audleigh Royal pealed out a triumphant welcome; flags and triumphal arches adorned the roadway. The Court was looking its brightest and best; the grand old service of golden plate, from which in olden times, kings, and queens had dined, was displayed. The rooms were made bright with flowers and warm with fires. It was a proud coming home for Lady Darrell, who had never known what a home was before. Her delicate face flushed as her eyes lingered on the splendor around her. She could not repress the slight feeling of triumph which made her heart beat and her pulse thrill as she remembered that this was all her own.

She bowed right and left, with the calm, suave smile that never deserted her. As she passed through the long line of servants she tried her best to be most gracious and winning; but, despite her delicate, grave, and youthful loveliness, they looked from her to the tall, queenly figure, the proud head was never bent, and the dark eyes had in them no light of love. It might be better to bow to the rising sun, but many of them preferred the sun that was setting.

Sir Oswald led his young wife proudly through the grand rooms into the drawing-room.

"Welcome home, my dear Elinor!" he said, smiling; "may you spend in Darrell Court the full of happiness!"

She did not smile. Pauline stood by, not looking at them. After the first careless glance at Lady Darrell, which seemed to take in every detail of her costume, and to read every thought of her mind, she turned carelessly away.

Lady Darrell sat down near the fire, while Sir Oswald, with tender solicitude, took off her traveling-cloak, his hands trembling with eagerness.

"You will like to rest for a few minutes before you go to your rooms, Elinor," he said.

Then Miss Hastings went up to them, and some general conversation about traveling ensued. That seemed to break the ice. Lady Darrell related one or two little incidents of their journey, and then Sir Oswald suggested that she should go to her apartments as the dinner-bell would ring in half an hour. Lady Darrell went away, and Sir Oswald soon afterward followed.

Pauline had turned to one of the large stands of flowers, and was busily engaged in taking the dying leaves from a beautiful plant bearing gorgeous crimson flowers.

"Pauline," said the governess, "my dear child!"

She was startled. She expected to find the girl looking sullen, angry, passionate; but the splendid face was only lighted by a gleam of intense scorn, the dark eyes flashing fire, the ruby lips curling and quivering with disdain. Pauline threw back her head with the old significant movement.

"Miss Hastings," she said, "I would not have said myself as that girl has done for all the money and the highest rank in England."

"My dear Pauline, you must not really, speak in that fashion. Lady Darrell undoubtedly loves her husband."

The look of scorn deepened.

"You know she does not. She is just twenty, and he is nearly sixty. What love—what sympathy can there be between them?"

"It is not really our business, my dear; we will not discuss it."

"Certainly not; but as you are always so hard upon what you call my world—the fashionable world, where men and women speak the truth—it amuses me to find flaws in yours."

Miss Hastings looked troubled; but she knew it was better for the passionate torrent of words to be poured out to her. Pauline looked at her with that straight, clear, open, honest look before which all affectation fell.

"You tell me, Miss Hastings, that I am deficient in good-breeding—that I cannot take my proper place in your world because I do not conform to its ways and its maxims. You have proposed this lady to me as a model, and you would fain see me regulate all my thoughts and words by her. I would rather die than be like her! She may be thoroughly lady-like—I grant that she is so—but she has sold her youth, her beauty, her love, her life, for an old man's money and title. I, with all my bonne-sperie, as you call it, would have scorned such sale and barter."

"Peal, Pauline——" remonstrated Miss Hastings.

"It is an unpleasant truth," interrupted Pauline, "and you do not like to hear it. Sir Oswald is Baron of Audleigh Royal and Master of Darrell Court; if a duke, thirty years older, had made this girl an offer, she would have accepted him, and have given up Sir Oswald. What a world, where woman's truth is so bidden for?"

"My dear Pauline, you must not, indeed, say these things; they are most unlady-like."

"I begin to think that all truth is unlike," returned the girl, with a laugh. "My favorite virtue does not wear court dress very becomingly."

"I have never heard that it affects rustic gowns either," said Miss Hastings. "Oh, Pauline, if you would but understand social politeness, social duties! If you would but keep your terrible ideas to yourself! If you would but remember that the outward bearing of life must be as a bright, shining, undisturbed surface! Do try to be more amiable to Lady Darrell!"

"No!" exclaimed the girl, proudly; "it have warned her, and she has refused to regard my warning. I shall observe her; any false appearance of amiability or friendship for her; it will be war to the knife! I told her so, and she chose to disbelieve me. I am a Darrell, and the Darrells never break their word."

Looking at her, the astonished grace of her attitude, the perfect pose, the grand face with its royal look of scorn, Miss Hastings felt that she would rather be her foe than a friend, such an enemy.

"I do hope, for your own sake, Pauline," she said, "that you will show every respect to Lady Darrell. All your comfort will depend upon it. You must really compromise matters."

"Compromise matters!" cried Pauline. "You had better tell the sea to compromise with the winds which have lashed it into fury. There can be no compromise with me."

The words had scarcely issued from her lips when the dinner-bell sounded, and Lady Darrell entered in a beautiful evening dress of white and silver. Certainly Sir Oswald's choice did him great credit. She was one of the most delicate, the most graceful of women, fair, dressing, fascinating—one of those women who would never dream of uttering unpleasant truth when elegant fiction so much better served their purpose—who loved fine clothes, sweet perfumes, costly jewels—who enjoyed their own comfort in a graceful, languid way to anything else on earth—who expected to be waited upon and to receive all homage—who deferred to men with a graceful, sweet submission that made them feel the deference a compliment—who placed entire reliance upon others—whose men felt a secret delight in ministering to, because they appeared so much one of themselves—who moved ceaselessly and exquisitely with subtle harmonious action, whose hands were always soft and jeweled, whose touch was light and gentle—a woman born to find her place in the lap of luxury, who shuddered at poverty or care.

Such was Elinor Darrell; and she entered the drawing-room now with that soft, gliding movement that seemed always to irritate Pauline. She drew a costly white lace shawl over her fair shoulders—the rich dress of silver and white was studded with pearls. She looked like a fairy vision.

"I think," she said to Miss Hastings, in her quiet, calm way, "that the evening is cold."

"You have just left a warm country, Lady Darrell," was the gentle reply. "The South of France is blessed with one of the most beautiful climates in the world."

"It was very pleasant," said Lady Darrell, with a dreamy little sigh. "You have been very quiet, I suppose? We must try to create a little more gayety for you."

She looked anxiously across the room at Pauline; but that young lady's attention was entirely engrossed by the crimson flowers of the beautiful plant. Not one line of the superb figure, not one expression of the proud face, was lost upon Lady Darrell.

"I have been saying to Sir Oswald," she continued, looking intently at the costly rings shining on her fingers, "that youth likes gayety—we must have a series of parties and balls."

"Is she beginning to patronize me?" thought Pauline.

She smiled to herself—a peculiar smile which Lady Darrell happened to catch, and which made her feel very uncomfortable; and then an awkward silence fell over them, only broken by the entrance of Sir Oswald, and the announcement that dinner was served.

Final Draw in the Tennis Tournament.

The tournament which has been agitating the P.A.A.A. tennis club for the past month was drawn to a close on Wednesday afternoon, the final draw between Messrs. Peck and Retallack, resulting in favor of the latter, who thus won the championship of the club, and the medal presented by Mr. H. A. Hammond. Mr. Retallack is the acknowledged champion of the court.

The Mayor Serenaded.

The Port Perry Oddfellows' band in passing Mayor Stevenson's residence yesterday afternoon, were much struck with the beauties of the place. Wondering who owned it they made enquiries. On being informed who the possessor was they immediately instituted a serenade. His Worship went one better, invited the boys in, and assisted by his household, entertained them royally. It is well to wonder some times.

To-Morrow's Cricket Match.

The following gentlemen compose the Peterborough team for to-morrow's match with Toronto:—Messrs. Sam. Ray, Hugh Ray, C. J. Logan, J. E. Hammond, R. B. Rogers and James. Baker, J. Sterling, Max Hamilton, P. K. Cooper H. B. Carter and G. W. Hutton. This is a good team. The grounds are in perfect order, the cease just right, and there is promise of a delightful day's cricketting. The Toronto team will arrive this evening and wickets will be pitched early to-morrow. All lovers of a good game of cricket, who want to see a rattling good match, should not fail to be on the grounds to-morrow.

Imperial Horse Buyers.

During yesterday Col. Ravenhill, Col. Philips and Mr. J. Matthews, Officers of Her Majesty's Imperial government, who are in Canada to purchase army horses, visited Peterborough, putting up at the Oriental. Mr. John Greenwood, of Cobourg, and Messrs. H. Winch, and Dr. Stevenson, of town, whose services were secured as assistants, were not kept too busy. Only a small number of horses were offered, probably owing to the fact that farmers are busy harvesting, and require all their horses. None of the animals offered were taken, they not being of the proper class. Col. Ravenhill, in conversation, with an EXAMINER reporter said, the majority of horses raised in this section were altogether too heavy, for the purpose they required them for, while others again were too light. What they want is good sound riding horses, well bred, powerful and active. The demand for such horses in England was very great, 27,000 being imported annually. The officers found that the few horses of the right stamp which are offered are not sound, the result of having been worked hard as soon as they were big enough—probably from two or three years upwards—which prematurely exhausted their constitution. Western Ontario is the only part of Canada where they find the right class of horses in sufficient numbers to warrant their return. The officers will not visit Peterborough or the neighboring towns, for years at least, as it would require from five to ten years to raise the class of animals they require in sufficient numbers to make it worth their while to return. The officers left for Port Hope in the evening.

Band in the Park.

The band boys will blow in the park this evening. A concert of unusual excellence may be expected.

The Rivers for Western Ontario.

The Rivers, Captain [illegible] Lacrosse Club, accompanied by a number of friends and supporters, left for Hamilton to-day by the Grand Junction Railway. The club will play its match with the Hamilton club to-morrow, and being successful in three matches this season.

Fresh White Fish, Trout and Ham, arriving daily at Ostrom's, George St.

Royal Arcanum.

This order, of which a flourishing council exists in Peterborough, has for its object the fraternal union of all white men of sound bodily health and good moral character, the social education of its members, the care of widows and orphans, the care of sick members and assurance on the lives of its members to the extent of $2000. It was founded in 1877 and since that time has paid out $4,800,000. There have been nine calls in the nine years of its existence. A man, aged 35 years, joining at the time of institution, will have paid in calls only $127 and would have carried during that time, an assurance, in case of death, of $2000.

Baptist Sunday School Excursion.

While the town was alive with excitement yesterday owing to the visit of the Port Perry people, the pupils and teachers of the Murray Street Baptist Church, accompanied by a number of the congregation and their friends, enjoyed themselves in sailing down the river on board the Golden Eye. About three o'clock, after a pleasant run of about six miles, the boat returned, landing the party, numbering about three hundred, at Crawford's Grove, three miles down the river. Here the usual picnic festivities and sports were participated in to the satisfaction of all. Shortly after five the contents of baskets were spread out temptingly, and were quickly disposed of by the hungry party. After another season of amusement, of which boating was a prominent feature, the excursionists returned home, arriving at the wharf about 8.30, ready for the meeting of business or the next picnic.

St. Andrew's S. S. Pic-nic.

A pic-nic is a pic-nic all the world over, (except probably in Ireland, where it is called a fair,) but St. Andrew's Sunday School pic-nic may be always called a success. The scholars, teachers, and a number of the congregation, held their annual outing at Millbrook, yesterday. The train left the station shortly after twelve and ran down to Millbrook in short order. The pic-nic party proceeded to Medd's grove, a beautifully situated little park, about in the village. The baskets containing were left in this and a general collocation was the order. A number of lively sports were engaged in, by the younger persons, while the rest enjoyed themselves in swinging, strolling around, basking in the sun and cooling off in the shade. The contents of the baskets were carefully and generously considered, to the satisfaction of all. The fragments gathered up were few. The excursionists returned about half past seven, tired, but serenely satisfied, just as the Port Perry excursion train moved off.

A Conference of Oddfellows.

In view of the early meeting of the Grand Lodge of Oddfellows, an effort—with good prospects of success—is being made to hold a joint meeting of the two town lodges at the regular meeting of Otonabee Lodge on next Monday evening. It is desirable that every Oddfellow in town should be present on this occasion, when there will be considered the advisability of instructing the representatives to the Grand Lodge to invite that important body to hold its next annual communication in Peterborough. This is a step in the right direction, and it is to be hoped that the citizens will practically sympathize with the endeavour of the Oddfellows, to give this thriving town the benefit and honour of entertaining the Grand Lodge of Oddfellows next year. The delegates should not only go armed with the authority of the local lodges, but also with the assurance that the corporation of the town and the citizens generally will do all in their power to assist the local lodges in entertaining the delegates that compose the Grand Lodge, should it be seen fit to honour Peterborough by making it the next place of meeting.

A Parting Send Off.

Hundreds of persons, Oddfellows, Sons of England, ladies and common people assembled at the station yesterday evening to see the Port Perry excursion party off. Everybody seemed delighted and the parting was a most happy one. The Port Perry band which marched from the Otonabee Lodge rooms to the station, discoursing sweet music as they marched, were asked to play "The Girl I left Behind Me," just before they started. They declined with thanks, however, and gave another selection instead. The Port Perry girls evidently have them well trained. A number of Sons of England and Oddfellows, as the train was moving out, gave three mighty cheers for the excursionists. The result was a broadside of kisses thrown from the coach windows, while handkerchiefs fluttered at the windows until the train was lost to view. Every person was loud in praise of the excursionists. They were acknowledged to be one of the most orderly parties that ever visited the town. In return the excursionists were high in their praises of the town, its Mayor and its people, and especially of the Oddfellows and Sons of England, who gave them such a generous reception. On all sides it was agreed to be the most enjoyable excursion that ever proceeded out of Port Perry, or any place else. They will come again and bring their neighbours with them.

—Owing to misinformation, the names of Messrs Chas. Porter, M. Mowry, Capt. Cooper and H. Quirk, were omitted from the Reception Committee of Otonabee Lodge of Oddfellows. These gentlemen were energetic in their efforts to entertain the excursionists.

Personal.

Mr. J. D. McIlmoyle, principal of the Peterborough Separate Schools, left town to-day on a trip through the Western States.

Mr. J. P. Dunn has assumed the duties of station agent of the C. P. R. here, succeeding Mr. F. R. Jennings. Mr. Dunn has been popular and well liked wherever he has been located, and there is no doubt that in Peterborough his discharge of his duties will result in promoting the interests of the road and popularizing it more than ever.

Another Industry.

Mr. D. H. McGeough, of Orillia, is in town to-day, arranging for the manufacturing of mattresses and for upholstering. He has secured the premises east of Mr. Allan's Temperance House, Hunter street, and will commence operations in about a week.

A Missionary Baptism Party.

A telegraphic despatch says that the parsonage of Rev. Dr. Brodie, of Otonabee, was visited by some scoundrel between 1 and 5 o'clock on last Wednesday morning, and $37 in money and Mr. Brodie's gold watch, an English patent lever, chronometer balance wheel, No. 14,632, were stolen.

C. P. R. Facilities.

The fast express which leaves Peterborough for the west at 8.39, reaches Toronto Junction at 11.10, and the Union Station at 11.45. Returning, it leaves Toronto at 5 o'clock and reaches Peterborough at 7.53. It is a fast through train, and stops only at two or three principal stations en route. It presents a convenience to merchants and other business men, doing business in Toronto. Rapid time—over five hours for business in Toronto, and arrives home at an early hour.

Hot Water Heating.

Geo. Bolton shipped another of his celebrated hot water boilers to-day, this time to Messrs. Butterworth & Co., Ottawa, for the new residence of Mr. Wm. Hodgson, architect, of that city. He has now orders from Belleville, Hamilton, Toronto, and the United States, and says the demand for hot water heating in the United States is something unprecedented since the use of steam in tubular boilers has been prohibited by law in schools in New York and Brooklyn, even with a competent engineer or boiler attendant in charge.

An Oddfellow Drum-Major.

Yesterday Mr. Charles Porter was constituted by Otonabee Lodge, the escort—acting local drum-major—of the Port Perry Oddfellows band. He showed them every attention and the chief points of interest. In recognition of his kindness, the band before leaving for home, serenaded Mr. Porter, who in return entertained the band, which passed an unanimous vote of thanks to him for both his hospitality and the efficient escort he had extended them. Neither the visitors nor local Oddfellows will soon forget the services rendered by Mr. Porter yesterday.

The Fatal Paris Green.

Yesterday, four deaths took place in the South ward, from poisoning by Paris Green. A little daughter of Mr. H. W. Watson, plucked some grass seeds growing along side potatoes, upon which Paris Green had been used, and placed it in two or three bird cages. Mr. Watson fearing the results, hastened to remove the poisonous provender, but before he could do so, four of the canaries dropped dead. Too great care cannot be used in dealing with this deadly drug.

An Honour Conferred.

Mr. E. E. Henderson this morning received his credentials as representative of Guiding Star Encampment of Oddfellows, Lindsay, at the annual meeting of the Grand Encampment to be held in London, a day or two prior to the meeting of the Grand Lodge. Mr. Henderson has, since his residence in Peterborough, maintained an active connection with the Lindsay Encampment, of which he is a charter member. He represented it at Grand Encampments on two different occasions, and his selection again this year, is a flattering compliment to his abilities, and a pleasing recognition of his active and intelligent interest in the promotion of the success of the Order, of which Mr. Henderson may be justly proud, and upon which the EXAMINER and his many friends cordially congratulate him.

EGAN'S IMPERIAL TRUSS

Read the following extract from a letter of a well-known citizen of St. Catharines,—hundreds like it:

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 20th, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—Being over 70 years of age, and over 30 years ruptured, looked upon my case as hopeless, especially as I tried various appliances without success, among others, recently, two springless trusses made in York State; besides me $40. Nothing would retain my Hernia. I have worn your truss over four months, night and day, with great satisfaction and comfort; even to bathe in it the rupture has never come down, it holds me perfectly secure under all circumstances. You may publish it for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, CAPT. B. KING.

This new Spirial Spring Pad Truss has taken ten years to make it perfect; is guaranteed to hold the very worst case during the hardest work or severest strain. It will cure every child sore; and 90 out of every 100 of adults. Be warned—don't waste your money on useless appliances, but send stamp for our treatise; it contains full information, your neighbors' testimony, price list and questions for you to answer. When writing please mention this paper. Address, Intending purchasers will consult their own interest by inspecting my sample Instruments, as I will not be undersold. Organs from $40 to $400.

CATARRH CURED—25 YEARS STANDING.

DR. WASHINGTON, Throat and Lung Surgeon, 215 Yonge St., Toronto:

St. Thomas, June 26, 1886.

THE JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and as I am now able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat,

Yours truly, W. H. COX.

Ross Payne, Harry Phillips, William Main and James Dops, four little boys, were arraigned before the court charged by Mr. Ingram, Secretary of Ashburnham School Board, with breaking thirty panes in the Ashburnham school on Monday last.

All the boys pleaded not guilty.

William Milligan, another small boy, was called and testified that he saw Jas. Dops and Wm. Main, throwing stones toward the Ashburnham School on Monday. He did not see them hit the school or break any windows.

The magistrate asked who broke the windows, but none of the boys knew. He then dismissed the boys, reserving judgment, with a warning never to appear before him again.

THE ASSAULT CASE.

T. Cavanagh was summoned before the court charged by Henry Rossiter, with having committed an assault on him, Friday afternoon.

Wm. Mitchell testified,—I was at Cavanagh's hotel yesterday; Mr. Cavanagh was there; so was the complainant. I did not see anything take place between them.

Henry Rossiter was sworn and testified,—I was at the corner of Cavanagh's hotel yesterday; I was talking to a man named Conroy; when I was passing up street he spoke to me; Mr. Cavanagh came out and said, "Rats" to me; I said, "By the way you are shouting rats around here, you must have plenty around here." I said, "You had better give over calling me "rats," or I shall take proceedings in law against you." He replied, "You may go to hell for all I care," and with that he shoved me off the sidewalk. This is the assault I complain of.

To Mr. Pousette—Cavanagh did not tell me to move on, as I was drawing a crowd.

Mr. Pousette—How did Cavanagh shove you?

Witness—"Come here and I will show you." He then gave an illustration, giving Mr. Pousette a shove that made him stagger several paces, "It was harder than that, too."

Witness—Conroy saw the occurrence; several men on the other side of the street also saw Cavanagh shove me.

David Conroy was called but did not appear. P. G. Pidgeon said he did not serve the witness, not knowing where Conroy lived.

Henry Sherwood,—I saw the crowd at Cavanagh's yesterday; I was laying stone across the street; I saw Mr. Cavanagh and the complainant; I did not see Cavanagh shove Rossiter; I heard Cavanagh say to Rossiter, "Clear off the sidewalk, I don't want any such things as you around here;" I did not hear what Rossiter replied; I laid a stone and then saw Rossiter staggering back as if he had been shoved.

Mr. Edwards,—I do not propose to call any other witnesses.

The Magistrate,—Adjourned till Monday.

Mr. Cavanagh,—I can't be here on Monday. I have to go away to buy horses.

Magistrate,—I don't care, its adjourned till Monday.

"RATS!"

William Lahey, charged by Henry Rossiter with using grossly insulting language to the complainant yesterday, pleaded not guilty.

Henry Rossiter, testified,—As I was passing Cavanagh's door, Lahey shouted at me: "Rats! Rossiter the informer! Flavelle's scab!" He came to the bedroom window and when I was near the Mechanics' Institute shouted the same names. I know these words were directed towards me because he coupled my name with them, "Rossiter the informer, Rossiter Cavanagh's [illegible] me "rats" from the bar door. I don't know the meaning of "rats." He also called me "scab and informer." I saw Lahey stick his head through the bedroom window and shout out these names again.

To Mr. Edwards—These names were called loudly, as if to annoy and attract attention, and to get the boys to follow his example.

To Mr. Pousette—I pass Cavanagh's sometimes four or five times a day, to see if the Scott Act is violated. I don't think it should be annoying to Cavanagh. It's only a guilty man that knows fear.

George Hudson—My place of business is across the street from Cavanagh's, but lower town. I heard the words "rats" called out yesterday. I could not say whom the words applied to.

William Manning, testified,—I heard something shouted after Rossiter yesterday; it came from the bedroom over Devlin's harness store; "Rats" and "dirty scab" were the words; Rossiter was on Hunter street at the time. I did not see the defendant. The names were repeated several times.

R. J. Hartley,—I heard "rats" called after Rossiter yesterday; also "scab;" it's a general thing; I saw Rossiter pass the door; the words seemed to come from all over; it came from Cavanagh's hotel.

Henry Shenwood—I could not say that I heard the defendant call "rats" at Rossiter. "Rats" seems to be a by-word,—the men where I work call it to each other every day; it was there before I went there, that is, they used the expression before I started to work there, about six weeks ago.

Mr. A. P. Pousette, Q. C., counsel for the defendant, submitted that it was not shown that the defendant had used those words "rats and scab" toward Rossiter. It was shown that "rats" was a by-word, and often used to call dogs.

Mr. Edwards, counsel for the complainant, submitted that the evidence plainly sustained the charge.

The magistrate, in delivering judgment, said:—The complainant is what you call an informer or inspector, the agent of the amateur or volunteer Scott Act Association. His mode of collecting information is to visit such places as are likely to sell liquor. Cavanagh's place is such. The law is right, and a person enforcing the law cannot be condemned. Rossiter walked up and down the street in front of Cavanagh's. Mr. Cavanagh may consider him a nuisance, but he had a legal right to walk up and down the street. Any person who called him scurrulous names, and thus take away the enjoyment of rights of a citizen, is breaking the law. The charge is [illegible] the defendant. There is no doubt he is the man, as he is identified by Rossiter. Lahey may be displeased with the conduct of Rossiter, but it is none of his business. "Rats" is an innocent name in itself, but used as it was, it was insulting. "Scab" would imply something dirty. "Informer" would not be insulting, but the defendant had no business to call him names. I find him guilty of the charge.

In order that it may be an example, and to teach him not to call names, I impose a fine of $20 and costs, in default of payment, distress, and in default of distress, imprisonment for 20 days.

A SECOND ASSAULT.

William Whelan, charged by Henry Rossiter, with having assaulted him the complainant yesterday afternoon, was summoned before the court. He admitted the charge.

Henry Rossiter was called to the box.

Mr. Pousette objected to Mr. Rossiter giving evidence. He submitted that the defendant had admitted the charge and the magistrate should pass sentence.

The magistrate said he wanted to hear the nature of the offence. It was admitted that it was a common assault.

Mr. Rossiter, was sworn and testified.—I will state what occurred after Mr. Cavanagh assaulted me. After Cavanagh shoved me from the sidewalk and when I told him I would have him prosecuted, some person shouted "go for him, and give it to him for all you are worth." As I was going toward the road I said he could not do it himself, and would have to get some of his friends to help him, Whelan came from behind and struck me and then threw me down. When I was down I heard several shout, "give it to him," "kill him!"

To Mr. Pousette,—I did not pull out my revolver before this; nor did I put my my hand on it; I put my hand in my pocket to pull my revolver, when Conroy grabbed me from behind, putting his arms around me and carried me over to Mitchell's harness shop; I pulled my revolver there and not before. I put it in my outside pocket then and came out to the road. I then cried three cheers for the Scott Act.

William Whelan, testified,—I generally go to my dinner at one o'clock; after dinner I heard Rossiter say "I can lick any three men in the crowd," I then struck him; I did not hear what took place between Cavanagh and Rossiter.

This concluded the evidence.

The magistrate in giving judgment said:—In this case, Mr. Whelan is another employe of Cavanagh's. This bad blood between Cavanagh and Rossiter evidently is the cause of the assault. It is something the nature of a conspiracy.

A man standing near the witness box, said—I don't think so; if Rossiter said the same to me, I'd kick the ——."

The Magistrate—Wait till you hear this judgment and perhaps you will change your mind. I find the defendant, Wm. Whelan, guilty. The judgment of this court is that he be confined in jail for one month.

A COUNTER CHARGE.

Henry Rossiter was summoned before the court, charged by T. Cavanagh with having used grossly insulting language toward him.

The defendant pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Edwards, counsel for the prosecution, asked for an enlargement.

Mr. Pousette, Q.C., counsel for the complainant, objected, and asked Mr. Edwards to show cause.

Mr. Edwards submitted that David Conroy, a material witness, was not present.

Mr. Cavanagh said he wanted the case tried immediately.

Mr. Pousette said he did not object under the circumstances, and the magistrate adjourned the case till Monday.

Baseball.

The Bethany baseball team arrived in town this afternoon, and at the time of going to press a game between Bethany and a town team was being played on the Riverside Park.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, July 26th, trains will depart by C. P. R., from Peterborough, as follows:—For Toronto and the west, at 5.31 and 8.39 a. m. and 6.42 p. m., for Ottawa, Montreal and east, at 11.30 a. m., 7.33 and 10.56. p. m.

Law and Order Vindicated.

After the police court was adjourned this morning, a large crowd assembled at the door of the station, and apparently thinking that the penalty in the case of Whelan was too severe, showed a disposition to prevent the police from conveying him to jail. Mr. A. P. Pousette, Q. C., counsel for Whelan, induced them to forgo their opposition. A crowd, however, still remained together for sometime. It is to Whelan's credit that he acknowledged his offence and showed a willingness to condone his breach of the peace, by quietly submitting to the course of the law.

Nothing in the Paper.

"There is nothing in this paper!" exclaimed pretty Gracie Loring, dashing it upon the floor; "it is a miserable, stupid sheet anyhow!"

Look again, you spoiled child of fortune! at its carefully printed columns, with the different headings, home and foreign news, the wit and humor, and miscellaneous items; then pause for a moment to consider how the over-taxed editor has endeavored to please you. There is probably no class of men more over-worked than these, no labor more wearing than mental labor. It is so easy to cry out, "There is nothing in the paper," for those who know nothing of its drudgery, the painstaking, the hours of mental weariness, the tedious labor it takes to make it please its various readers. No paper can be printed with its carefully prepared columns containing nothing, unless the editors, reporters, printers, and all connected with it, are a body of fools, which is a matter too absurd to be suggested.

"There is nothing in the paper!" is such a general expression, used when people are not exactly suited with it. Riding once in a street car, I observed two gentlemen purchase the same newspaper. One, after glancing hastily over it, handed it across to a friend opposite, exclaiming as he did so:

"There, Sam; have the morning paper? There is nothing in it, however. It is scarcely worth reading."

The other gentleman who had purchased the paper commenced reading it, and seemed evidently absorbed. Presently the man sitting beside him asked what interested him so much.

"Oh, everything!" he replied, "the paper is well gotten up this morning. The editorials are especially fine, besides the general matter is most interesting."

This instance shows that what pleases one person fails with another. Be assured it is no child's play to edit and conduct a newspaper. It is a very tedious, important, responsible position, and the man who satisfactorily conducts a well-circulated, popular newspaper, has almost the wisdom of Solomon. Let those who doubt the assertion take the editor's place for a little while; there will be nothing more needed for convincing proof. And as for our friend, Gracie Loring, when she is tempted to make such silly remarks, she had better pause to consider first where the fault lies, if in the paper or in her own silly little head.—Amelia Thropp.

Cushing's Manual in Court.

A raw citizen in Idaho was elected a justice of the peace, and the only law book he had was a "Cushing's Manual." The first case before him was that of a cowboy for stealing a steer. When the case was called, the only lawyer in the little town was there to defend the prisoner.

"As there is no counsel for the other side," he said, "I make a motion that the case be dismissed."

The justice looked over his manual.

"A motion has to be seconded," he said.

"I second the motion," promptly responded the prisoner.

"The motion has been made and seconded that the case be dismissed," said the justice. "All in favor will please say 'aye.'"

The prisoner and his attorney voted aye.

"All opposed say 'no.'"

Nobody voted.

"The motion is carried and the case is dismissed," remarked the court. "A motion to adjourn is now in order."

The prisoner make the motion and the court adjourned.—Washington Critic.

An illicit distillery near Gainsville, Ga., which for six years has escaped detection, has been discovered and raided. The proprietor had dammed a small creek, ostensibly to make a fish pond, and under the dam he placed his distillery, with tunnels for ingress and egress. The smoke was conveyed to his house and passed out through the kitchen chimney.

R. W. MUNCASTER,

The Daily Examiner.

SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1886.

Hon. Thomas White, Minister of the Interior, predicts that Sir John's Government will be returned to power. He says, "We have to look forward to an increase of the public debt."

Canada Presbyterian: Gladstone's position to-day is a splendid illustration of the fact that character is indestructible. He has been beaten at the polls, but he is still the greatest living man.

A Dominion election is on hand in Chambly, P. Q.,—mums. Sir John issues an amnesty to the half breeds rebels—effect. The return of the Government candidate is a French constituency—expected result.

Hon. Thomas White in his modest address at Victoria, British Columbia, claimed the credit of the Pacific Railway being built. According to him, Sir John played a very ordinary second fiddle in the affair.

Will the Mail please give the date when it intends to "smash confederation?" The granting of an amnesty to the halfbreed rebels by Sir John is an indication of "French domination" the Mail can't afford to ignore.

Sir John told the people at a Catholic picnic, a few days ago, that he was a Home Ruler. The other day he told the people of Winnipeg he rejoiced that Gladstone was defeated. Sir John believes in having two strings to his bow, but he should remember the fate of the man who tried to sit on two stools at once.

The Lindsay Warder doesn't believe that "political exigencies" justify lying. Yet to the Warder man Mr. White is still the white-haired boy. Mr. White believes in illicit printing to papers supporting the Government, and the Warder ink distributor is not the man to "go back" on his bread and butter.

The Tory papers are bound to make Sir Richard Cartwright very numerous. One puts him down as candidate for Victoria, another for Lennox, another for Hastings and so on. How they would like to keep him out of the House altogether, but the way the political outlook shapes itself, the present Finance Minister had better sit in his seat as much as he can now, for the place that knows him now, will know him no more after the next elections.

The Montreal riflemen are kicking against the quality of the ammunition made by the Canadian Government. If Sir Adolphe Caron, Minister of Militia, devoted as much attention to the duties of his office as he does to running after tinsel titles for his own glorification, there would be no cause for complaint. There is no reason in the world why Canadian powder should not be made as good as any in the world. Saltpetre sulphur and charcoal are abundant and cheap, and nothing but the jobbery that marks everything the Dominion Government touches can be quoted to justify the condition, not only of ammunition, but of everything else they have to do with.

Dminion Doings.

Winnipeg on Wednesday had the first rain in three weeks.

Complaints are made that boys in the vicinity of Guelph play baseball on Sunday.

The colored people of Sandwich are holding a camp meeting.

The supply of deer in New Brunswick is largely on the increase, especially on the Upper St. John, and on the Machias, and Skeodic rivers.

A man named Miller, who was shipping stock west, fell asleep on the track in the railway yard in Winnipeg, on Wednesday morning, and was run over by a locomotive and killed.

A shrewd photographer located himself at Fort William about the time for the payment of the treaty money to the Indians in that vicinity, and ever since he has enjoyed a great boom in tin types.

A coroner's jury before whom an enquiry into a recent incendiary at Paris has just been completed, returned a verdict to the effect that the fire was the result of the wilful act of some person or persons unknown.

A few days ago a cattle train was ditched at New Westminster, B. C. About seventy-five cattle were killed outright, maimed, or escaped with a terrible bellowing to the woods, and four of the cars were completely wrecked.

The Quebec Chronicle calls upon the health officers of the city to take action to prevent carters conveying to the grave in their conveyance the bodies of dead children, owing to the great danger of disease being transmitted in this way.

A young colored lady entered a Fredericton, N. B., store and asked for a pair of flesh colored stockings. The clerk immediately passed her down an assortment of black ones and ever since he has been expecting an invitation to seek another situation.

The suggestion that the natives of Ireland for the removal of the names of deceased persons from the Dominion voters' lists should be sent to the Dead Letter office was by the humorist of the St. Thomas Journal, not by the Times' funny man, as stated. The Times man, as a matter of fact, was engaged in constructing a joke to the effect that the first essential qualification in a workingmen's candidate for Parliamentary honors is that he should be a sound Tory.

Mrs. Samuel Whitehouse, of St. John, N. B., arose at five o'clock in the morning left the house in her night dress, gained access to the tank-yard of the house occupied by her husband's brother, and was there detected in the act of taking Paris green. Medical attendance was at once procured, and an attempt made to use a stomach pump, but the woman resolutely refused to open her mouth, and had to be placed under the influence of chloroform before the pump could be used. The poison in the meantime had taken effect and her life could not be saved. It is supposed that despondency caused by long continued ill-health drove her to commit suicide.

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY MARTHA M CLAY

CHAPTER XXIII.

A RICH GIFT DECLINED.

The bridal fête dinner at home was over, and had been a great success. Lady Darrell had not evinced the least emotion; she had married for her present social position—for a fine house, troops of servants, beautiful, warm, fragrant rooms, choice wines, and luxurious living; it was only part and parcel of what she expected, and intended to have. She took the chair of state provided for her, and by the perfect ease and grace of her manner proved that she was well fitted for it.

Sir Oswald watched her with keen delight, only regretting that years ago he had not taken unto himself a wife. He was most courtly, most deferential, most attractive. If Lady Darrell did occasionally feel weary, and the memory of Aubrey Langton's face rose between her and her husband, she made no sign.

When the three ladies withdrew, she made no further efforts to conciliate Pauline. She looked at her, but seemed almost afraid to speak. Then she opened a conversation with Miss Hastings, and the two persevered in their amiable small talk until Pauline rose and went to the piano, the scornful glance on her face deepening.

"This is making one's self amiable!" she thought. "What a blessing it would be if people would speak only when they had something sensible to say!"

She sat down before the piano, but suddenly remembered that she had not been asked to do so, and that she was no longer mistress of the house—a reflection sufficiently galling to make her rise quickly, and go to the other end of the room.

"Pauline," said Lady Darrell, "pray sing for us. Miss Hastings tells me you have a magnificent voice."

"Have I?" Miss Hastings is not so complimentary when she speaks to me alone."

Then a sudden resolution came to Lady Darrell. She rose from her seat, and, with the rich rustle of silver and white, sweeping around her, she went to the end of the room where Pauline was standing, tall, stately, and scornful, turning over the leaves of a book. The contrast between the two girls—the delicate beauty of the one, and the grand loveliness of the other—was never more strongly marked.

Lady Darrell laid her white hand, shining with jewels, on Pauline's arm. She looked up into it proud face.

"Pauline," she said, gently, "will you not be friends? We live together—will you be friends?"

"No!" replied Miss Darrell, in her clear, frank voice. "I gave you warning. You paid no heed to it. We shall never be friends."

A faint smile played round Lady Darrell's lips.

"But, Pauline, do you not see how useless all your resentment against me is now? My marriage with Sir Oswald has taken place, and you and I shall have to live together perhaps for many years—it would be so much better for us to live in peace."

The proud face wore its haughtiest look.

"It would be better for you, perhaps, Lady Darrell, but it can make no difference to me."

"It can, indeed. Now listen to reason—listen to me!" and in her eagerness Lady Darrell once more laid her hand on the girl's arm. Her face flushed as Pauline drew back, with a look of aversion, letting the jewelled hand fall. "Listen, Pauline!" persevered Lady Darrell. "You know all this is nonsense—sheer nonsense. My position now is established. You can do nothing to hurt me—Sir Oswald will take good care of that. Any attempt that you may make to injure me will fall upon yourself; besides, you know you can do nothing." In spite of her words, Lady Darrell looked half-fearfully at the girl's proud, defiant face. "You may have all kinds of tragic plans for vengeance in your mind, but there are no secrets in my life that you can find out to my discredit—indeed, you cannot injure me in any possible way." She seemed so sure of it, yet her eyes sought Pauline's with an anxious, questioning fear. "Now, I, on the contrary," she went on, "can do much for you—and I will. You are young, and naturally wish to enjoy your life. You shall. You shall have balls and parties, dresses—everything that you can wish for, if you will only be friends with me."

She might as well have thrown drops of oil on an angry ocean to moderate its wrath.

"Lady Darrell," was the sole reply, "you are only wasting your time and mine. I warned you. Twenty years may elapse before my vengeance arrives, but it will come at last."

She walked away, leaving the brilliant figure of the young bride alone in the bright lamp-light. She did not leave the room, for Sir Oswald entered at the moment, carrying a small, square parcel in his hand. He smiled as he came in.

"How pleasant it is to see so many fair faces!" he said. "Why, my home has indeed been dark until now."

He went up to Lady Darrell, as she stood alone. All the light in the room seemed to be centered on her golden hair and shining dress. He said:

"I have brought the little parcel, Elinor, thinking that you would prefer to give your beautiful present to Pauline herself. But," he continued, "why are you standing, my love?—You will be tired."

She raised her fair, troubled face to his, with a smile.

"Moreover, it seems to me that you are looking anxious," he resumed. "Miss Hastings, will you come here, please? Is this an anxious look on Lady Darrell's face?"

"I hope not," said the governess, with a gentle smile.

Then Sir Oswald brought a chair, and placed his wife in it; he next obtained a footstool and a small table. Lady Darrell, though half-ashamed of the feeling, could not help being thankful that Pauline did not notice these little attentions.

"Now, Elinor," said Sir Oswald, "I regard you as my child. It is my pleasure to see you wear the gift which I have chosen myself. Open it, and see if you like it."

She opened the case, and, uttering a beautiful suite of rubies set in pale gold.

Miss Hastings uttered a little cry of delight.

"How very beautiful!" she said.

"Yes," responded Sir Oswald, holding them up to the light, "they are finest. I ask no one what they cost. It is enough that they are worthy the gift of which I have been treated. Now then, repeat

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

Mr. William Menzies, who for the past eighteen years, has been managing foreman of the Peterborough Review, will on the 31st of August, assume the position of news foreman of the daily and weekly EXAMINER. His long experience and thorough acquaintance with the duties of such a position will do much to promote the efficiency of our already first-class staff, and tend to make the EXAMINER even more worthy of the patronage of advertisers.

Mr. F. J. Jameson will continue to have the general supervision of the different departments of the EXAMINER establishment, and will give that close attention to the requirements of the business, and to the wishes of its many and generous patrons, as he has done in the past.

The EXAMINER will now have hands in its several departments, equal to those of any printing house in the province, and with a complete equipment of type, plant, presses and requisite machinery, is capable of filling, in the highest style of the art preservative and its allied branches, any order that may be entrusted to it.

J. R. STRATTON.

I beg to say, in connection with the above, that I will be glad to meet in my new position any of my friends with whom I have had so much pleasant personal business relations in the past, and can assure them of the same faithful attention being bestowed on any business I may have with them in the future as has characterized my dealings with them in the past.

The Park Concert.

The Fire Brigade Band occupied the pavillion in the Court House Park, yesterday evening and gave one of their pleasing concerts, the programme being long, varied and select. The audience numbered thousands, who rambled around the walks, the new central slat walk being the favorite, while others seated themselves as comfortably as possible and enjoyed the music at ease. At half-past nine the National Anthem sounded a retreat, and the audience separated, satisfied with their feast of music, as far as it went, but still longing for more.

Breakfast for the Million.

China Hall, with its magnificent stock, is also noted for the tasteful and effective manner of displaying it. This morning passers-by noticed a splendid new departure. In the show window was placed a breakfast table, covered with snowy linen, and on it was laid out covers for a breakfast party of eight. The table was resplendent with china, silver, cut glass, cut flowers and everything demanded in a breakfast equipment fit for a prince. The menu consisted chiefly of eggs a la Chinoise, the coffee and toast awaiting the order of guests. The sight was a beautiful one, and as an attractive mode showing goods to advantage, drew the attention and praise of every passing citizen.

Said he was Robbed

Yesterday afternoon a young and respectable looking man told to several parties around town that he was robbed at an hotel in Ashburnham. He said he went into the hotel in the forenoon, and had some "Monte" to drink which went to his head. He placed himself comfortably on a sofa and went to sleep. When he awoke he found that he had been relieved of his watch and chain and about thirty dollars. He made enquiries but no person around the place had taken particular notice of him, and knew nothing of his loss. He was advised to notify the police, but no information has been laid yet.

Double figures were contributed as follows: S. Ray, 31; M. Hamilton, 27; R. B. Rogers, 25; J. Baker, 21, and H. Ray, 16. Peterborough's first wicket fell for 40 runs. Toronto had a score of 18, three wickets having fallen. At the conclusion of the home bat, the teams disposed of a lunch, provided by the lady friends of the club. The prospects are in favor of the home team.

Temptations to Tourists.

Mr. A. B. Cameron, agent for the great Northern Transit Company, was in town yesterday, in the interest of the steamship line he represents. This company's route on the northern lakes includes weekly excursion trips from Collingwood, Owen Sound or Wiarton, to the far famed straits of Mackinaw, passing along the northern shore of Georgian Bay and through the magnificent scenery of Manitoulin Channel. The steamers "Atlantic" and "Pacific" leave the above places every Wednesday and Saturday and the fare for the round trip of six days, including meals and cabin berth, is only $12 or $15 from Toronto and corresponding specially low ratees from any other point on the G. T. R. This is a magnificent route, the scenery is unsurpassed in its ever-changing and infinite variety. Cool exhilarting air, comfort with privacy, rest, relaxation, regular meals. The steamers are so timed that the return trip passes in the daylight the points of interest passed at night on the upward journey. Six days of continuous sight seeing, splendid scenery, pure air and comfort for only $12. The steamers are splendidly equipped, and the table equal to that of first-class hotels. No better route can be found in the world for a week's enjoyment of travel. Full particulars and tickets may be secured from the local agent, Mr. T. Menzies. Peterborough tourists can leave here in the morning and reach Collingwood in time to take the steamers in the morning of the next day.

[illegible] Victorias—Victorious—

[illegible] Minden Match, Defeating [illegible] "Rosedale" by Three Goals to None.

[illegible] of retrieving the [illegible] brought on the Dominion field, yesterday played its maiden match and successful in defeating their opponents, the Rosedale Ironsides, by three straight games, on their own grounds.

The game was called about 3.30, the teams taking their positions on the field as follows:

VICTORIANS.		HASTINGS.
Jos Phelan	goal	Butler
M. Brown	point	Hill
T. Wood	cover point	Perry
J. Mason	[illegible] field	Cummings
J. Powell	"	Elder
W. McAvella	"	Murray
F. Lavene	centre	Howard
F. Traynor	home field	Keadry
T. Gilpen	"	Code
F. Peckenham	"	Sales
H. Neil	2nd home	Wilson
D. Ross	1st "	Fowler
M. McDonald	field captain	Eliot
S. Wright	umpire	J. Bunting

Dr. Coughlin, referee.

The first game only lasted four minutes. Lavene and Howard fairly [illegible] sphere, sent it to Peckenham, who threw for Hastings' goal. The ball was promptly returned. A lively scientific game followed. Traynor, after a struggle, secured the rubber, and by a sharp shot, put it through the Hastings' flags.

The second game lasted thirty-five minutes and was a hard game. The Hastings men who have been used to having it all their own way, found that they had met their match and played accordingly. The visitors were too much for them, however, and outplayed them at almost every point. Neil by a strong stroke sent the ball again through the Hastings flags, taking the second game.

In the third face Howard drew the ball and by a pretty shot sent it straight for the Peterborough goal. It was quickly returned, however, but again went up the field. After a lively contest the Hastings men claimed a game, which was disallowed. After another skirmish Birkenham, by a clever shot, took the third and final game, the time being 23 minutes.

The game throughout was well contested, but the roughness of the ground prevented team play on any account. Individual play was very good, and it would be difficult to say who made the best play, as each did well when opportunity offered. However, it was generally acknowledged that Lavene captured the honors for the Riversides and Cumming for the Hastings. Wood, Traynor, Maher, Giroux and Ross were also very strong for the Riversides, while on the other side Berry and Butler were most successful.

A return match between the clubs will be played in town at an early date.

The Riversides will have other [illegible] themselves the best of winning glory for the town and their support should be supported, as no doubt they will do, when they have shown that they mean business.

A Challenge for "Monarch" Crosby

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I see in your issue of yesterday, another scribble from that notorious writer. I hereby challenge Mr. Crosby to give the names and signatures of the two parties where I had the Williams and Marshall & Smith pianos in competition with him. Also the date at which the alleged competition took place. Also the name and signature of the lying woman I took an organ from. I also challenge him to give the name or signature of any person that I sold or tried to sell a crooked piano to. If he fails to do this, he must swallow his lies and be branded a deceiver, as he has tried to bolster up inferior instruments by falsely publishing competition with mine.

Yours, etc.,
D. SMART.

New York Infant Mortality.

What a slaughter of the innocents? In one week this month 1,111 children under five years of age died in New York city. It is no libel to say that in the majority of cases these lives would have been saved by that attention to diet and fresh air, which means of preventing death are available to the majority of even poor parents. More children died through the ignorance of parents as to the proper diet in the summer than from any other cause.

THE JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat. My throat for weeks was so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow, the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a large goose quill through. It is now entirely healed, and as I am now able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor, and also to recommend any who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat.

Yours truly, W. H. COX.

Police Court.

The Rossiter Assault Case Again—Counter Charge by Cavanagh Dismissed—T. Cavanagh Fined $20—A Scott Act Case Disposed of.

The court was again crowded by an eager audience, this morning, and the police found it difficult to maintain proper order.

The hearing of the evidence in the Rossiter vs. Cavanagh case was continued.

David Conroy was called and sworn. He testified. I was at Cavanagh's corner when Rossiter came up Water street; I think I spoke to him first; there were some little boys calling Rossiter "rats"; there were three or four of them; they were not Cavanagh's boys; when Rossiter turned round, these little shavers ran into Cavanagh's yard; Cavanagh came out then and said something; I didn't remember what it was; I was talking with Rossiter about "rats"; I think Cavanagh said, I smell rats, or something of that kind; Rossiter said something then; Cavanagh asked Rossiter what he was shadowing around his place for; Rossiter said he would stand around all he liked; Cavanagh said Rossiter was a church going man and he should not stand around to provoke him; Rossiter said he would stay around as long as Cavanagh was selling the Devil to the people; Cavanagh I think I touched him slightly and told him to move on; there was a great row after that and I can't remember everything; I don't think the whole business would have amounted to a row of pins if Whelan had not come up.

To Mr. Poussette,—Cavanagh just touched him like this and said, "move on, move on, and don't be standing around here," (Here witness gave Mr. Poussette a slight shove.) Rossiter did not pull out the revolver when talking to Cavanagh; it was when he was being attacked that he pulled it out; I believe I did hear some person say "kill him." I knew he had not many friends there; and it would have gone hard with him if I had not been there. Whelan was striking him when he drew the revolver; he groped for it before but did not succeed in getting it out. Rossiter was defying the crowd when Whelan came up.

To Mr. Edwards,—I don't know that Rossiter used the word "provoke" at all; I did not see Cavanagh take part in the assault at all; I don't say he shoved Rossiter very gently; it was a slight shove though.

Mr. Poussette,—I'll show you the way Rossiter said he did it. (Mr. Poussette selected Mr. Edwards for the subject.

Mr. Edwards would not permit the illustration and he did not give an example.

This closed the evidence for the prosecution.

Mr. W. Croft was called to the box.

Mr. Edwards asked that any other witness for the defence should be excluded from the court.

The magistrate thought it was not necessary, and the case was proceeded with.

W. Croft testified,—I was at my house on Friday; I saw what occurred between Cavanagh and Rossiter; Cavanagh touched Rossiter lightly with his hand as if to shove him away; the touch had no apparent effect upon Rossiter, who was moving back at the time.

Wm. Delaney testified,—I was not at Cavanagh's last Friday until after the row was over.

T. Cavanagh was sworn, and testified,—I was sweeping out the bar on Friday afternoon; Rossiter passed up and down in front of my place a couple of times; some boys began to call "rats" after him; Rossiter asked me who was calling him "rats;" I said, "You go to hell and find out;" he said, "I will haul you up." I said, "you can haul up and be d——d." I said you go around to churches and schools preaching and it would serve you better not to come around provoking me. He said he would come around all he liked as long as I continued to sell the devil to the people. I said "you move on and don't be drawing a crowd," at the same time I touched him with my hand, like this, (giving an illustration.) Rossiter struck at me and I wheeled around and dared any three men in the crowd. Whelan came up and hit him a slap and knocked him down and jumped on him. The stove I gave him did not cut him at all; if I struck him it would need him a week; I did not intend to hurt him; I did not think he was worth it; Rossiter had his hand in his pocket when he was drawing the stove; I saw the revolver in Rossiter's hand when Conroy carried him across the street.

To Mr. Edwards—I did not say anything to Whelan before or after he struck him; I did not say "go for him" or "kill him," I did not take a stick out of Rossiter's hand.

Mr. Rossiter, was called by Mr. Edwards.

Mr. Poussette objected to his being heard.

The magistrate overruled the objection and the witness was heard.

H. Rossiter, testified—I never said I dared any three men in the crowd before I was assaulted by Whelan.

To Mr. Poussette—I still say that Mr. Cavanagh shoved me as far as the desk. I am here to tell the truth and I have told it.

Mr. Poussette, submitted that the charge had not been sustained. The evidence showed that Mr. Cavanagh had not committed an assault. As he only touched Rossiter, and not with the intention of hurting him or assaulting him, he had not committed an assault. He merely did what a peace officer would do in discharging his duty.

Mr. Edwards held that the evidence showed clearly that an assault had been committed. The evidence of Mr. Sherwood showed that Rossiter staggered from the shove.

A voice from the audience suggested that he was drunk.

The magistrate in summing up the evidence said that in this matter it had been shown that an assault had been committed. Mr. Cavanagh was angry at the time and his action was different from what it would have been under different circumstances. He was ordering a man from his premises, who was obnoxious to him. Both witnesses proved that they had some hot words and that Cavanagh had shoved Rossiter. Mr. Cavanagh occupies a prominent position as an hotel keeper, and Rossiter—I don't think there was any love between them. The boys called Rossiter "rats," and when Rossiter asked Cavanagh who called the names, he replied "go to hell and find out." The action of Cavanagh was like applying a red hot poker to a barrel of powder. The witnesses say that the crowd gathered in a very short time, and that Rossiter had not many friends amongst them, and had it not been for the interference of Mr. Conroy, Rossiter might have been killed. Mr. Conroy was very good in saving Rossiter and Cavanagh's friends. The seriousness of Cavanagh's offence is that he does an act which is the commencement of a serious assault. I will deal leniently with Mr. Cavanagh, although I consider that this action of Mr. Cavanagh and the assault that followed was one offence. However, I will impose a money fine upon him.

The judgment of this court is that he pay $20 and costs, and in default of payment, 20 days in gaol.

A COUNTER CHARGE.

The charge against H. Rossiter for using insulting language toward T. Cavanagh, enlarged from Saturday, was called.

Mr. Poussette, Q.C., counsel for the complainant, asked for an adjournment on the ground that material witnesses were not present.

Mr. Edwards objected to an enlargement, holding that the prosecution had plenty of time to subpœna witnesses.

The magistrate said he thought it would be better to dispose of the case at once. The complainant had failed to issue any subpœnas in the case, and the evidence would be similar to that already given in the assault case.

Mr. Cavanagh said Rossiter called him insulting names on other occasions.

Mr. Cavanagh was sworn and testified—On Friday Rossiter said I was selling the devil to poison people. This occurred during the altercation previous to the assault upon Rossiter.

D. Conroy, testified—On Friday I heard Rossiter use what I thought was insulting language toward Cavanagh, heard him say about what Mr. Cavanagh said; that Cavanagh was selling the Devil to the people,—I hardly know whether he said to poison the people.

M. McNulty, testified—I heard the altercation between Rossiter and Cavanagh on Friday; I heard Rossiter ask who called "rats," and after some words Cavanagh told Rossiter to move on and not draw a crowd; Rossiter said, "You are selling the Devil to poison the people." I didn't hear Cavanagh tell Rossiter to go to hell.

The magistrate—Dismissed with costs.

Mr. Poussette was not satisfied with the judgment of the court. He pointed out that the language used by Rossiter was calculated to provoke a breach of the peace. If it was not, he did not know what would. What would be a grosser insult to a hotel keeper than the words used by Rossiter. Mr. Cavanagh would, he thought, be justified in striking Rossiter on the spot. He held that the magistrate was reversing his decision of Saturday, in the Lahey case.

The magistrate said the differences in these cases was very great. The evidence taken on Saturday showed that Lahey had persistently, maliciously and in cold blood, repeated in such a voice that he could be heard several hundred feet away, the expression "rats," "Flavelle's scab," etc., while in the other case the words complained of were used in an altercation, which one witness said Cavanagh had begun.

THE NEWELL CASE DISPOSED OF.

The hearing of evidence in the Newell case, enlarged from last week, was continued. The defendant was not present.

Geo. Jones, village constable of Norwood, entitled that Samuel Newell admitted to him that he had paid four gallons of liquor.

Col. Reynolds testified that he had thirty or four glasses of intoxicating liquor at Newell's. He paid for the liquor, which Samuel Newell served him with.

The magistrate found Samuel Newell guilty and imposed the usual $20 fine, with an additional one of four months in gaol.

A Tie Draw Game

Between Peterborough and Janetville—Peterborough 6 to 5 at the close of Eight Innings.

The baseball match between the Peterboro' which proved to be the Janetville club and a local nine, clubbed for the occasion, resulted in a draw at the eighth innings, when the score stood 5 to 5, at which time the Janetville club had to leave the field to catch their train, which left at 6.40. The game was begun about 3.30 and continued, with slight interruption, till about 6.10. The match was a very good exhibition of baseball, and would have been a very fine game if it had not been for two lively disputes which occurred. The teams, which were well matched, were composed as follows:—

PETERBOROUGH.		JANETVILLE.
F. Cameron	pitcher	R. Gibb
F. Billings	catcher	M. Sharp
A. Mines	short stop	J. Wilson
W. Metherall	1st base	W. Sisson
J. Lundy	2nd base	R. Mills
G. Fligg	3rd base	C. Syers
W. Craig	right field	G. Syers
H. Galley	centre field	J. Egal
J. McAuliffe	left field	J. Burns

Mr. D. Haw acted as umpire and was given credit for being impartial in his decisions.

The Janetvilles won the toss and sent the home team to the bat. Lundy started off with a two-base hit. Fligg followed and placed the ball to left field and took first base. Cameron went out on a foul, and McAuliffe took the bat. He made a hit to left field which brought Lundy and Fligg home. Mines drove the ball to centre, succeeding in reaching his base. Billings followed suit, and Mines took third. Billings stole second, when Metherall was caught out, and the side went out for 3. The visitors sent Burns to bat first, who placed the ball to left field and took his base. Sisson followed and was promptly put out on striker. Syers and M. Sisson succeeded in getting bases, but did not score, as Miller was put out on first, and the side retired for one.

Peterborough again went to bat but did not score till the 4th innings, when Billings succeeded in getting around the diamond. The 5th and 6th innings were also unfruitful for the home team.

The visitors fared worse and were whitewashed in the 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th innings, Cameron's pitching puzzling the batsmen to such an extent that they did not get a base hit during these innings.

In the 6th innings the Janetvilles piled up three runs, Burns, Sisson and G. Syers scoring. Real retired for three strikes, Mills on a heavy strike to left field took first. Gillis struck high and was cleverly caught by Cameron, who passed it to 1st, which Gillis was moving back toward, but which he did not reach in time.

In the 7th innings Landy knocked a liner, which Wilson refused, and the batsmen went around the diamond. Fligg, Cameron and McAuliffe managed to get to 3rd, 2nd and 1st respectively, making a forced run and Galley was sent to bat. He made three strikes and was held by Sisson, who touched the plate and sent the sphere to second, where Cameron was found off his base, thus putting out the striker, and third and 2nd on the forced run. The umpire called side out and the fielders trooped in. Then the fun began. The home team held that there were only two man out, viz: Galley, caught out on strikes, and Cameron, out on 2nd, claiming that as Galley did not leave the plate the others were not forced to run. They also claimed a run for Fligg, who came in from 3rd. The umpire decided in favor of the visitors, ruling, that as Galley became a base runner as soon as he made three strikes, the others were forced to run, and that when Sisson, the catcher, after catching Galley touched the plate, he put out Fligg, forced to run from 3rd, and Cameron at 2nd. The blue book was consulted and after a wordy and lengthy discussion, the umpire's decision was accepted. The visitors wished to leave, but were persuaded to play another innings, and went to bat.

In this innings neither side scored. Real, Sisson and Mills for the visitors retiring on strikes. For the home team, Billings, Metherall and Craig went out the same way.

As it was then after six o'clock, the visitors had to leave, and the game was drawn. The score stood.—

Peterborough	3 0 0 1 0 0 1 0—5
Janetville	1 0 0 0 0 3 1 0—5

The play was very fair all round, and individual mention is not necessary, each man playing his part well. Cameron, as pitcher for Peterborough, succeeded in striking out fifteen men, which is considered a very creditable accomplishment. Billings, although he had the top of one of his fingers taken off a few days ago, was a hero behind the bat. The fielding on both sides was very fair, considering the roughness of the ground. The return match is looked forward to with interest by the players.

Church Chimes.

Rev. W. M. Roger, of London, brother of Mr. G. M. Roger, of town, occupied the pulpit of St. Paul's church yesterday, morning and evening. His discourses were interesting and edifying and no doubt will result in good.

The Toronto Cricket Club Team Defeated by the P.A.A.A. Club by an Innings and 32 Runs—A Glorious Game and Victory.

The cricket match played on Saturday, between the Torontos and the P. A. A. A. Cricket Club team the fifty association grounds was easily won by Peterborough by an innings and 32 runs.

Peterborough batted first, S. Ray and Logan facing Marsh and Senkler. The scoring at first was slow, as the bowling was well on the spot, but the batsmen played carefully, and before Logan was got rid of, 40 had been scored. S. Ray played a very fine innings for 31, as did Max Hamilton for 27. Rogers bit hard and well for his 25, and "Baker" reminded us of "Auld Lang Syne" by the vigorous way in which he got his 21. H. Ray played well for his 14, but the rest did not add materially to the score. Marsh bowled well as the analysis will show.

Toronto sent in Collins and the veteran Heward, to the bowling of Logan and Rogers. "The Duke" was in form and opened with two fours before Heward was bowled. Brown scored a couple and was smartly taken in slips, a fate which also befel "the Duke" when he had again given the field a rest by losing the ball over the fence. This made three wickets for 18 runs; and before the score reached 20, 8 wickets had fallen, Rogers having at that time got 6 wickets for 8 runs. Logan made a grand one hand catch in slips, Whitlaw the victim. Dickey and Hector broke the spell, and succeeded in pulling the score up to over 50.

Logan and Rogers both bowled well, Rogers being at first simply unplayable.

Being more than 60 behind, Toronto had to follow their innings. Three wickets fell for 6 runs, and then Collins, who seemed to scorn anything less than a four, got one out of the ground, but in trying to repeat the dose he got the ball only as far as Hatton's hands, and there of course it stayed. Brown and Marsh made a good stand, both playing excellent cricket. Carter at shortslip here made three very sharp catches, retiring three good men in succession. The bowling of Logan in this innings was very fine, and Carter also bowled well, although he got only one wicket.

The following are the scores:—

During the match, the lady friends of the Association prepared a dainty lunch, which the cricketers fresh from the field did ample justice to, and for which they wish publicly to express their appreciation and gratitude.

The grounds were in excellent condition and reflected great credit on Mr. S. Ray. The Toronto men said it was the best wicket they had played on this season.

AGAINST SIR CHARLES.

THE JURY SUSTAIN THE FORMER VERDICT IN THE CRAWFORD CASE.

The Summing up of the Judge Read Against the Co-Respondent—Enthusiasm at the Verdict by the Radical Press—Sir Charles Addresses the Chelsea Electors.

LONDON, July 23.—The case of Crawford against Crawford and Dilke was given to the jury this afternoon. They returned a verdict finding Mrs. Crawford guilty of adultery with Sir Charles Dilke, and granting Mr. Crawford a divorce. The jury was absent twenty minutes.

The decision arrived at by the jury is that Mr. Crawford is entitled to a divorce from his wife on the ground of adultery with Sir Charles Dilke, decided nisi by Justice Charles Butt on February 12, the present case being simply a rehearing at the intervention of the Queen's proctor, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the decree nisi should be set aside, on the ground of collusion, or on new evidence invalidating the wife's confession. The jury finding in favor of Mr. Crawford the proceedings confirms the previous decree, and make it absolute at the expiration of the six months attaching to it. This six months will expire on August 12. The Queen's proctor has been condemned to pay the costs of the present proceedings.

In his closing argument Sir Walter Phillimore for the Queen's proctor urged the jury to believe that Mrs. Crawford's whole confession was concocted for the purpose of sheltering Capt. Foster.

Mr. Justice Hannen in summing up the case for the jury laid stress upon Sir Charles Dilke's abstention from testifying in the former trial. This, said the judge, had the effect of suggesting that Sir Charles was guilty of the charges he refrained from denying. "Would you, gentlemen of the jury," asked the judge "remain silent even under advice of counsel when a tissue of falsehoods was told against you, seriously affecting your moral character?"

Justice Hannen's charge from beginning to end was decidedly against Sir Charles. The Judge alluded to the absence from the testimony of confirmation of the essential portions of Sir Charles Dilke's story as "certainly remarkable," while Mrs. Crawford was able to describe the bedroom in Sir Charles' house in which she said he spoiled her, although he swore that he had never taken her into his house. Besides this, the evidence given by those who had testified to the co-respondent's visits to the house in Warren-street remained unshaken. If the jury believed these witnesses, the Justice said, then the whole value of Sir Charles Dilke's testimony was destroyed.

The formal verdict of the jury contains no mention of Sir Charles Dilke's name. It simply declares that no material facts were suppressed at the previous trial at which "the decree of divorce was obtained justly." There were no scenes attending the declaration of the result of the trial, although the people outside the courtroom received the announcement with some cheering. Sir Charles Dilke vanished immediately after the verdict was rendered. Donald Crawford, the plaintiff, when he left the building was cheered by the people in the street.

Justice Hannan's summing up is pronounced by lawyers generally a model of clearness, compactness and impartiality. It was delivered in solemn and impressive tones and held the audience spellbound. In reference to the long interval which elapsed between the first and second acts of adultery between Mrs. Crawford and the co-respondent, the justice thought the lady's explanation sufficient when she said Sir Charles was not well during this period.

After the verdict was rendered Sir Charles looked the picture of misery. Captain Foster sat near Sir Chas. Dilke eyeing him closely and evidently gloating over his rival's abjection.

Sir Charles Dilke has ordered the sale of his house at Chelsea. He will leave England and reside permanently in the south of France.

Sir Charles to the Electors of Chelsea.

LONDON, July 23.—Sir Charles Dilke has issued the following address to the Chelsea electors:

"Gentlemen, you are aware that the intervention of the Queen's Proctor in the case of Crawford versus Crawford, on the plea that the said divorce was pronounced contrary to the justice of the case, has led to a verdict in which the finding of Justice Butt has been affirmed. This decision has been come to without my being allowed to appear by counsel or to address the jury; without my being allowed to cross-examine for myself, also without my being supplied with the particulars or being given in advance the names of witnesses, all of which under the order of the court have been freely supplied the other side.

"The Queen's Proctor, who accepted some of my suggestions for the cross-examination, and Sir Walter Phillimore, who maintained my position with conspicuous ability, appearing, however, not as my advocate, but as the representative of a public official, were also placed under great disadvantage by having practically to disclose the defence before the evidence in support of the charges was given.

"I have always known how difficult my cause would be even if it were presented as I had reason to suppose it would be by my own advisers, and I have never concealed it from you, but the method of procedure ordered by the court's intensified the difficulty.

"As far as my public life goes I have no option but to accept the verdict, while protesting once more against its justice. I can well assure you and with equal solemnity as sworn in court that I am innocent of the charges brought against me, and respectfully and gratefully bid you farewell.

"I am Yours Faithfully,
"CHARLES DILKE."

The Press Endorse the Verdict.

LONDON, July 24.—The News this morning, commenting on the verdict in the Crawford divorce case, says:

"We would be only too glad if we could dissent from the jury's verdict, but unfortunately there is no room for scepticism any longer to assert itself, and the lamentable career of this able statesman is thus prematurely closed. We are compelled to sorrowfully admit that no more shocking outrage upon the obligations of friendship, the points of morality, the primary instincts of decency, or the sanctity of family ties, was ever dragged before a disgusted community."

The Chronicle says:

"The veil has been lifted, and a career of the blackest villainy and most inordinate lust is revealed. Sir Charles took advantage of his eminent position and wealth to practice the most diabolical deceit, while being, it appears, steeped in the foulest iniquity."

THE THREE MILE LIMIT.

Arguments to be Advanced in the Case of Seizure of U.S. Schooners.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 23. The answer of the defendants in the seizure cases of the fishing schooners David J. Adams and Ella M. Doughty was filed with the Registrar of the Vice-Admiralty Courts this afternoon. They contain nothing new in connection with the attitude taken by the United States Government. The nature of the cases and the circumstances under which the seizures were effected are detailed and the purchase of bait within the limit is acknowledged in each case, but the defendants declare that such bait was for use beyond the three-mile limit and contend that consequently its purchase was not an infraction of the fisheries convention. Regarding the doughty seizure it is declared that the vessel while fitted for an outside trip or for fishing in waters other than belonging to Canadian Territory was driven into port for shelter and while there the bait was offered for sale. It being desirable that fresh supplies be procured, purchase was made, but for use only outside the three-mile line. The main question raised in both cases and upon which the United States will base their contentions is that an American vessel can legally buy or procure bait [illegible] the limit for [illegible] beyond the three [illegible]

LOVE'S VICTORY.

CHAPTER XXIV.

A PUZZLING QUESTION.

The way in which the girl supported her disappointment was lofty in the extreme. She bore her defeat as proudly as some would have borne a victory. No one could have told from her face or her manner that she had suffered a grievous defeat. When she alluded to the change in her position, it was with a certain proud humility that had in it nothing approaching meanness or envy.

It did not seem that she felt the moneyless; it was not the disappointment about mere wealth and luxury. It was rather an unbounded distress that she had been set aside as unworthy to represent the race of the Darrells—that she a "real" Darrell, had been forced to make way for what, in her own mind, she called a "baby-faced stranger"—that her training and education, on which her dear father had prided himself, should be cast in her face as unworthy and deserving of reproach. He and his artist-friends had thought her perfection; that very "perfection" on which they had prided themselves, and for which they had so praised and flattered her, was the barrier that had stood between her and her inheritance.

It was a painful position, but her manner of bearing it was exalted. She had not been a favorite—the pride, the truth, the independence of her nature had forbidden that. She had not sought the liking of strangers, nor courted their esteem; she had not been sweet and womanly, weeping with those who wept, and rejoicing with those who rejoiced; she had looked around her with a scorn for conventionalities that had not sat well upon one [illegible] and now she was to pay the penalty for it all. She knew that people talked about her—that they said she was rightly punished, justly treated—that it was a blessing for the whole county to have a proper Lady Darrell at Darrell Court. She knew that among all the crowds who came to the Court there was not one who sympathized with her, or who cared in the least for her disappointment. No Darrell ever showed greater bravery than she did in her manner of bearing up under disappointment. Whatever she felt or thought was most carefully concealed. The Spartan boy was not braver; she gave no sign. No humiliation seemed to touch her, she carried herself loftily; nor could any one humiliate her when she did not humiliate herself. Even Sir Oswald admired her.

"She is a true Darrell," he said to Miss Hastings; "what a grand spirit the girl has, to be sure!"

The Court was soon one scene of gayety. Lady Darrell seemed determined to enjoy her position. There were garden parties at which she appeared radiant in the most charming costumes, balls where her elegance and delicate beauty, her thoroughbred grace, made her the queen; and of all this gayety she took the lead. Sir Oswald lavished every luxury upon her—her wishes were gratified almost before they were expressed.

Lady Hampton, calling rather earlier than usual one day, found her in her luxurious dressing-room, surrounded by such treasures of silk, velvet, lace, jewels, ornaments of every description of the most costly and valuable kind, that her ladyship looked round in astonishment.

"My dearest Elinor," she said, "what are you doing? What beautiful confusion!"

Lady Darrell raised her fair face, with a delicate flush and a half-shy glance.

"Look, aunt," she said, "I am really overwhelmed."

"What does it mean?" asked Lady Hampton.

"It means that Sir Oswald is too generous. These large boxes have just arrived from Paris; he told me they were a surprise for me—a present from him. Look at the contents—dresses of all kinds, lace, ornaments, fans, slippers, gloves, and such articles of luxury as can be bought only in Paris. I am really ashamed."

"Sir Oswald is indeed generous," said Lady Hampton; then she looked round the room to see if they were quite alone.

The maid had disappeared.

"Ah, Elinor," remarked Lady Hampton, "you are indeed a fortunate woman; your lines have fallen in pleasant places. You might have looked all England over and not have found such a husband. I am quite sure of one thing—you have everything a woman's heart can desire."

"I make no complaint," said Lady Darrell.

"My dear child, I should imagine not; there are few women in England whose position equals yours."

"I know it," was the calm reply.

"And you may really thank me for it; I certainly worked hard for you, Elinor. I believe that if I had not interfered you would have thrown yourself away on that Captain Langton."

"Captain Langton never gave me the chance, aunt; so we will not discuss the question."

"It was a very good thing for you that he never did," remarked her ladyship. "Mrs. Bretherton was saying to me the other day what a very fortunate girl you were—how few of us have our heart's desire."

"You forget one thing, aunt. Even if I have everything I want, still my heart is empty," said the girl, wearily.

Lady Hampton smiled.

"You must have your little bit of sentiment, Elinor, but you are too sensible to let it interfere with your happiness. How are you getting on with that terrible Pauline? I do dislike that girl from the very depths of my heart."

Lady Darrell shrugged her delicate shoulders.

"There is a kind of armed neutrality between us at present," she said. "Of course, I have nothing to fear from her, but I cannot help feeling a little in dread of her, aunt."

"How is that?" asked Lady Hampton, contemptuously. "She is a girl I should really advise you to send packing; but, as for being afraid of her, Elinor Darrell—for shame! Why do you say that, Elinor?"

"She has a way with her—I cannot describe it—of making every one else feel small. I cannot tell how she does it, but she makes me very uncomfortable."

"You have more influence over Sir Oswald than any one else in the world; if she troubles you, why not persuade him to send her away?"

"I dare not," said Lady Darrell; "besides, I do not think he would ever care to do that."

"Then you should be mistress of her, Elinor—keep her in her place."

Lady Darrell laughed aloud.

"I do not think even your skill could avail here, aunt. She is not one of those girls you can extinguish with a frown."

"How does she treat you, Elinor? Tell me honestly," said Lady Hampton.

"I can hardly describe it. She is never rude or insolent; if she were, appeal to Sir Oswald would be very easy. She has a grand, lofty way with her—an imperious carriage and bearing that I really think he admires. She ignores me, overlooks me, and there is a scornful gleam in her eyes at times, when she does look at me, which says more plainly than words, 'You married for money.'"

"And you did a very sensible thing, too, my dear. I wish I only wish I had the management of Miss Darrell; I would break her spirit, if it is to be broken."

"I do not think it is," said Lady Darrell, rising as though she were weary of the discussion. "There is nothing in her conduct that any one could find fault with, yet I feel she is my enemy."

"Wait a while," returned Lady Hampton; "her turn will come."

And from that day the worthy lady tried her best to prejudice Sir Oswald against his proud, beautiful, wayward niece.

CHAPTER XXV.

A PUZZLING QUESTION.

"Does Miss Darrell show any signs of disappointment?" inquired Lady Hampton one day of Miss Hastings.

Miss Hastings, although she noticed a hundred faults in the girl which she would fain have corrected, had nevertheless a true, strong, and warm affection for her pupil; she was not one therefore to play into the enemy's hand; and, when Lady Darrell fixed her eyes upon her, full of eagerness and brightened by curiosity, Miss Hastings quietly resolved not to gratify her.

"Disappointment about what?" she asked. "I do not understand you, Lady Hampton."

"About the property," explained Lady Hampton, impatiently. "She made so very sure of it. I shall never forget her insolent confidence. Do tell me, is she not greatly annoyed and disappointed?"

"Not in the way you mean, Lady Hampton. She has never spoken of such a thing."

Her ladyship felt piqued; she would have preferred to hear that Pauline did feel her loss, and was grieving over it. In that case she would have been kind to her, would have relented; but the reflection that her pride was still unbending annoyed her, and she mentally resolved to try if she could not force the girl into some expression of her feelings. It was not an amiable resolve, but Lady Hampton was not naturally an amiable woman.

Fortune favored her. That very day, as she was leaving the Court, she saw Pauline standing listlessly by the lake side feeding the graceful white swans. She went up to her with a malicious smile, only half-veiled by her pretended friendly greeting.

"How do you do, Miss Darrell? You are looking very melancholy. There is nothing the matter, I hope?"

A Wetting.

On Saturday evening, at the conclusion of the baseball match, on the Riverside Park, Mr. W. S. Cooke and his little boy, shoved off their canoe from the landing at the foot of the park and paddled for the open river. Mr. Cooke happened to look around at another canoe which followed, when the current from the millrace struck the craft and over it went. The water was not very deep and Mr. Cooke with little difficulty placed his boy across the canoe and paddled ashore.

Personal.

Rev. F. H. Wallace will leave to-morrow morning, for Ocean Grove, New Jersey, for a summer vacation. It is hoped he will have a pleasant holiday. He has arranged that the pulpit of the Charlotte street church shall be supplied by the following reverend gentlemen in his absence: Rev. Dr. Badgley, of Victoria University; Rev. F. Johnston, Keene; Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Ashburnham; Rev. Mr. McFarlane, of Lakefield; Rev. Mr. Davis, Rev. Mr. Duff and Rev. Mr. Cattanach, of town.

Mr. John Welsh, of Stratford, M.W.G.P. of the Grand Encampment of Oddfellows, Ontario, will be in town on Thursday evening.

Wind and Weather.

A Heavy Thunder Storm Sweeps over Lakefield, Young's Point and Vicinity.

The thunder storm which raged last night was very severe in the neighborhood of Lakefield and vicinity. A high wind, almost a hurricane prevailed, and fences were strewn over roads and fields in wild disorder. The rain which was very heavy continued for upwards of two hours, in many places flattening out the crops, doing considerable damage. The roads were flooded at several points. The rain was also very heavy at Burleigh. No doubt parties camping out in the vicinity had unpleasant experiences.

The Piano Controversy.

To the Editor of the EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—Before accepting Mr. Smart's polite challenge, I would ask him to give names and signatures of the parties where he claims in his reply to "Monarch" on 22nd inst., we had competition in which I was beaten. I am not aware of any such. His bluffing that I am a deceiver, liar, swindler, etc., does not make me one, as I shall prove to his mortification and disgrace. I am pleased to learn that he and Mr. Hartley, who have been so long at variance, are now good friends—"misery loves company." I want him also to tell you why he asked for a glass of water—he did not drink—when he was exchanging covers on the Marshal & Smith piano he delivered a few weeks ago. After which I hope to be prepared to vindicate my honor so grossly assailed by him.

Yours truly,
J. W. CROSBY.

Peterborough, July 23th, 1886.

No Misfortune.

There is no blundering in the dark—in the action of Burdock Blood Bitters upon the system. It is no scattering shot-gun prescription, no cure all—but it acts directly upon the fundamental points of health—the stomach, the liver, the bowels, and the blood, and works its cures in a natural manner through nature's channels. 28-2t

A Smith Septuagenarian Commits [illegible]

[illegible] Threat of Life at Seventy-four. Cheated with a Razor—A Pitiable Death.

On Monday [illegible], a well known resident of [illegible] took his life by suicide. The unfortunate man was seventy-four years of age and lived with his son, Sylvanus. He [illegible] spite of the fact that interest had blinded him, he was able to drive the cows to the pasture. He usual, on Monday night, he drove the kine to the field. He did not return and some anxiety [illegible] and a search instituted, but was unsuccessful. On Tuesday morning, when the men folks were [illegible] to find the object of their search [illegible] death.

THE FATAL GASH.

The wound, which was made with a razor, was on the left side of the throat, and had completely severed the jugular vein of that side, and death from hemorrhage must have been speedy. His determination must have been great, for, blind though he was, he had managed to secure and secrete a razor, and wait an opportunity, when he would be secure from interference with his desperate [illegible] to take his life.

The melancholy incident creates considerable excitement and great regret, as the deceased was well known, having been a resident of Smith township for over forty years. It appears that a variety of circumstances led to the suicide. He has been greatly annoyed by business troubles, having become involved by making large land purchases. His [illegible] was in addition an [illegible] that preyed on his mind and resulted, [illegible] recently spoken of it, "driving death."

THE COMBINATION OF TROUBLES

seems to have overbalanced his mind and led him to cut short his days, which at the longest could not have been many more.

The deceased was born in Wales, in 1812, and came to Canada in 1841. Two years later he bought 200 acres of land, lot 18 con. 9th, Smith. In 1844 he married Margaret, daughter of Mr. Thomas Lockhart, by whom he had four sons: Sylvanus, Thomas, James and Benjamin and one daughter Hannah, who are all living.

Mr. Davies was an ardent patron and supporter of local agricultural exhibitions, his name being connected with the early days of the Provincial Exhibition. He was also a successful exhibitor, his wife having received the first prize for the best butter made in Upper or Lower Canada, at Montreal, in connection with the Great London Exhibition. Mr. Davis was also a Justice of the Peace, and at one time Assessor of the township.

[illegible] and was [illegible] and had all [illegible] decided opinions, and positive in [illegible] and dislikes. In religion he was a Baptist.

The violent and self-inflicted death of a man who has been known in this county nearly a half a century, will be learned with general regret.

There was an exciting struggle between a dog and a wild goose, at Medicine Hat, N. W. T., recently. The goose was unable to swim, and the dog went out into the river and attacked it. For a long time the issue of the contest was doubtful, but finally the dog triumphed, capturing the bird alive, and carried it to his master.

John Arnold, a Knight of Pythias, had his gold watch, valued at $300, stolen at Montreal. The case was put into the hands of the police, but in the meantime a former employe, of the hotel, at which Mr. Arnold was stopping informed the bookkeeper that he knew who had the watch, and that if a reward of $25 was offered it would be given up. The money was paid and the watch recovered.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

Mr. William Menzies, who for the past eighteen years, has been managing foreman of the Peterborough Review, will on the 2nd of August, assume the position of news foreman of the daily and weekly EXAMINER. His long experience and thorough acquaintance with the duties of such a position will do much to promote the efficiency of our already first-class staff, and tend to make the EXAMINER even more worthy of the patronage of advertisers.

Mr. F. J. Jameson will continue to have the general supervision of the different departments of the EXAMINER establishment, and will give that same diligent attention to the requirements of the business, and to the wishes of its many and generous patrons, as he has done in the past.

The EXAMINER will now have heads in its several departments, equal to those of any printing house in the province, and with a complete equipment of type, plant, presses and requisite machinery, is capable of filling, in the highest style of the art preservative and its allied branches, any order that may be entrusted to it.

J. R. STRATTON.

I beg to say, in connection with the above, that I will be glad to meet in my new position any of my friends with whom I have had so much pleasant personal business relations in the past, and can assure them of the same faithful attention being bestowed on any business I may have with them in the future as has characterized my dealings with them in the past.

Wonders of the Yosemite!

A trip to California may be excellent as a means of recreation and sight seeing; but in point of fact it can't compare in its effects upon an invalid's system, to Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," universally acknowledged to be the greatest blood purifier, blood purifier, consumption cure, and general revitalizer and tonic, in existence. By its use, thousands whom physicians could not help have been restored to health and happy living. All druggists. d15-6tw29

Driving Park Races.

A Monster Meet to be Held on August 31st and Sept. 1st—Liberal Purses Offered.

The directors of the Peterborough Driving Park and a large number of local sports held a meet yesterday evening, which promises to be the forerunner of a monster meet to be held later on in the season. At this meeting it was decided to hold two days' races on the park on August 31st and September 1st. The programme for the two days will consist of trotting and running races, which will undoubtedly be the best ever held in this part of Canada. $1,100 will be given in prizes, one purse alone being $300. The large and liberal purses offered no doubt will bring the best horses in Canada to compete in the several events, while the reputation the management have of conducting races fairly and squarely on honest sporting principles, which they are determined to maintain, will insure a grand success. The track is one the finest in Canada and there is no reason why it should not be brought prominently before the sporting public. Arrangements have been made with both railways, to issue tickets at reduced rates on the days mentioned. Posters announcing the particulars will be issued in a few days. In the meantime, the Directors of the park will supply any information required.

Personal.

Messrs. D. Breese, Chas. McClelland, Alfred Thomas and party, returned home last night from camping on Stoney Lake. They had a jolly time.

Mr. J. W. Flavelle and party returned home last night, after having travelled from Lindsay to Nassau by water, the trip occupying one week.

Mr. R. S. Latimer, who has been for the past seven months surveying with the party of Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, P. L. S., in the Keewatin district and Manitoba, has returned to town for a month's holidays.

Mr. Vincent Eastwood, formerly with Mr. Melville Miller, has accepted a position in Mr. R. B. McKee's hardware store. Mr. Eastwood is an obliging and popular salesman and no doubt will do well in his new position.

Mr. James Stinson and "the boys" pitched their tents, Indian wigwam fashion, on the banks of the river, a couple of miles below Fancher's. Mr. A. Stutt accompanied the party to coach them in the matter of fishing—he being a proficient and enthusiastic disciple of Izak Walton.

Mr. Joseph Redmond, of Otonabee, will leave on Thursday for the Colonial Exhibition. His visit to the old country is principally to to attend the sale of pure bred short horn cattle, the property of James Bruce, on Tuesday, the 17th of August, 1886, at Burnside, Lochabers, Scotland. Mr. Burns is the greatest breeder of this class of thorough-bred stock in the British Islands and it is probable that some of the grand animals offered at the sale will be secured by Mr. Redmond and added to his already excellent herd.

"Monarch" Crosby.

To the Editor of the EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of the 21st, Mr. Crosby published what he would wish believed to be a great victory gained by him in competition with three of the leading pianos shown by myself, Mr. Hartley and nine others. This grave falsehood and Scottish misrepresentation I have proved has no foundation; if it had, why did he fail to answer my challenge. In his letter of yesterday, he shows signs of insanity and childishness. Instead of sticking to the first statement he made he wanders off to say my bluffing don't make him a liar, swindler or deceiver. He needs no more proof than is the above named profanities, as he has proved himself fully accomplished.

I therefore think it unnecessary to notice any statements or misstatements that such an unscrupulous man as Mr. Crosby may hereafter publish.

Yours truly,
J. W. Flavelle.

WORSE DEVILS THAN THE DIVIL.

The Devil was one day sitting on a stone, on the side of a solitary country road, and he appeared to be in some great trouble. His head rested on his hand, his eyes were fixed on the ground before him, and his face was very sad; in short, he really seemed to be in sore distress.

Along the road came Old Mag, the fortune-teller, and (as everybody called her and feared her as such) the country witch. "Halloo, master! You are very sad to-day. What's the matter?"

"I guess I have reason to be sad," answered the Devil. "Working so hard, and yet gaining nothing."

"How is that?" asked Mag.

"Do you know that old couple over yonder?" and the Devil pointed to a lonely farm-house not a piece from the road.

"The old man and woman over there? Certainly I know them."

"A nice, peaceable old couple, eh?" grinned the Devil sadly.

"Oho! that's what worries you," laughed the fortune-teller. "A very nice, peaceable old couple that won't let you get between them. Is that it?"

"That's it, exactly! I have been working very hard for all the years they are living together, (and it is now about forty) to sow discord between them, but all in vain. They live on quietly in spite of me. I don't like to give up the project after having gone to so much trouble about it; and yet I almost despair of ever gaining my point."

"What will you give me if I do for you what you can not do?" asked Mag in her own taunting way.

"You bring discord between that good old couple?"

"Yes, I."

"How long will it take you to do it, do you think?"

"O, a day or two."

"You do in so short a time what I could not do in all these forty years!"

"Yes," laughed the old sinner, "to show the Devil that there are persons on this world smarter than himself."

"If you can bring about what you say, I will make you a present of a pair of new shoes."

"Agreed!" said the old witch. "This is Thursday. Meet me here again next Saturday noon and I will get the shoes. Be sure to bring them along." With these words Old Mag hobbled away, studying how she could best fulfill the Devil's errand.

The next morning, Friday, she went to the farm-house "to try her luck," as she said. It was just as she wished. She found the old lady alone peeling potatoes for dinner, while her husband was out in the field, digging stumps. Mag bade her good-day and then began: "I am Old Mag, the country fortune-teller. Maybe you would like to have your fortune told?"

"I have nothing to do with fortune-tellers. Clear this house immediately," and the woman motioned to show Mag her way off.

"Just as I expected," said Mag. "Because I am a fortune-teller I dare not be listened to, but must be driven from the house. Couldn't I foresee that you would treat me thus? If you will not hear me, then beat the consequences," thus saying she turned to leave the house.

"Well, what have you got to say?" asked the woman, calling her back.

"Nothing. If you don't like to be enlightened, why, don't," replied Mag, in a sharp tone. "Moreover," she continued, softening her tone, "I didn't come to get angry, though I knew well enough that I would be thus treated. I came to tell you the truth, whether you like it or not!"

"Well, what is it?"

"There are great trials and troubles awaiting you! All I can say, they will come soon; your husband brings them, and there is only one way of turning them off."

"What way?" asked the woman rather anxiously.

"It is a somewhat odd way, and you may not believe in it," continued Mag. "When your husband is sound asleep, you must take his razor and cut a hair away here from his throat," and the witch pointed to her own throat to show the woman the place.

"If it won't do any good, it will at least do no harm to try it," thought the old lady.

"Just as you think," answered Mag. "But the sooner you do it, the better."

She turned again to leave the house, when the woman called after her, asking whether there was no danger.

"Safe, all safe, if you be watchful for this. May God preserve you from harm!"

As the old witch passed through the gate she said to herself with a chuckle: "So far my bargain is all right. Now for the old man."

She took a round-about way, so as not to be suspected. "Sir, I came this way of a purpose," thus Mag accosted him, "to warn you of a danger that is threatening you."

"Who are you?" asked the man abruptly.

"I am Old Mag, the country fortune-teller."

"I have no business with you. Go your way and let me in peace," and the man turned away from her to take up his work.

"I did not come here to tell you your fortune," persisted Mag, "but to warn you against certain danger."

"Get out o' this! I'll not hear another word."

"Well, then, be murdered, for aught I care," said Mag, turning abruptly to walk away.

"Murdered? Who talks about murder?"

"I do, and so do other folks, too."

"Am I to be murdered, you say?"

"Yes, you."

"Who wants to murder me?"

"Nobody else but your own wife."

"You're a liar, and be confounded!" exclaimed the man, almost in a fury.

"Hem! well that needs to be proved. I heard people say so and I thought it right to come and warn you. You would do well to have an eye on your wife and to try her, anyhow."

"How will she murder me, and why?"

"She will try to cut your throat with your razor, while you are asleep, so people say, and that as soon as she gets a chance. Why she wants to do it, I don't know."

"I will try her," said the man sullenly. "If it is false, then I will settle with you."

"I only tell you what I heard people say. Try her yourself and you will see. Good-day, sir." With this Mag left, saying to herself: "The old gentleman is all right, too. I will soon have my shoes."

At noon, when the man went home for his dinner, he watched his wife closely. Noticing that she viewed him, now and then, in a stolen, distrustful way, he grew suspicious, and began to look and act sour and sharp. "Aha!" thought his wife, "I see the trouble coming already."

After dinner he lay down as usual to take his nap; but this time to try his wife. Having shut his eyes he soon began to snore, and thus pretended to be most soundly asleep. His wife kept on doing her work after dinner as usual until she heard him snoring. Then she went into the room in which he was lying on the lounge, and to find out whether he was sleeping soundly enough for her purpose, she managed to make a noise by upsetting a chair. He did not stir, but snored away as strongly as before.

On tip-toe she went to the bureau, opened it cautiously, and took out her husband's razor. Having removed it from its case, she again stepped on tip-toe up to where her husband was lying. She stooped down towards him, holding the razor in her hand to cut the hair away from his throat; when, to her greatest dismay, he jumped up, seized her hand, from which the razor dropped to the floor, and in his rage hurled her into a corner of the room. The story now goes on to tell us that from this time forward the old couple never had a day of peace, so that at last they had to separate.

The next day about noon Old Mag came along the same road. She found the Devil sitting on the same stone, waiting for her. When he saw her approaching he got up, climbed over the fence, and putting the shoes to the end of a long pole, made ready to hand them to her.

"Why, old fellow, what do you mean?" laughed the witch. "Are you afraid of me?"

"Indeed, I am and ought to be," answered the Devil: "you did in one day what I could not do in forty years. That beats me! I have reason to fear you. Here, take your shoes; you have earned them well for your skillful and successful work."

Dear readers, I will not go bail for the truth of this story, just such be it is: but a truth it is. There are such devils in human form, that through their malice succeed in leading others into sin, thus bringing misery and death to the soul and doing what Satan himself, maybe, could not do. To such devils as these Jesus says: "Woe to him through whom scandals come. It were better for him that a millstone were put about his neck and he cast into the sea," Luke 17, 2.—The Guardian Angel.

Experiments continue to be made in the use of petroleum as fuel. A large Massachusetts iron furnace has successfully worked out its billets, plates, and bars for a month past, and a large works has been run for over a long time by the use of old kerosene oil casks. Other large coal consumers are preparing to readjust to the liquid fuel. The whole estimated cost, one large concern reports, will be saved in five or six years by the difference in cost.

SALT FOR DAIRY PURPOSES.

The faculty of the Agricultural College and Experimental Farm, Guelph, is conducting a series of experiments in the interest of the farmers of Ontario, and issues periodical bulletins, giving the results of these experiments made. They aim to present essential facts only, leaving details for treatment in the annual report of the institution. Being the work of specialists who have the best facilities for conducting experiments and recording observations they will, it is confidently hoped, afford to the farmers of Ontario valuable advice on the subjects with which they deal. The Ontario Government desire that wide publicity be given to the facts thus elicited. The latest experiments are with respect to salt for dairy purposes, and as the dairying industry has become a leading one, we give some of the conclusions arrived at by C. C. James, B.A., professor of chemistry at the Ontario Agricultural College:—

Common salt consists of sodium chloride (97 per cent. to 98 per cent.), water, calcium sulphate or gypsum (1½ per cent. to 2½ per cent.), calcium chloride, magnesium chloride, with traces of sand, clay, iron and dirt. The gypsum should not exceed 1½ per cent. to 2 per cent.; in excess it makes the salt difficultly soluble and produces a slime.

The strength of the brine is often measured by a hydrometer, or salometer, and the purity of a sample of salt thereby determined. But this is not an absolute test of the true value of a salt; the soluble impurities may be heavier than the pure salt, and thus an impure salt may produce a heavier brine than a purer salt. For ordinary purposes, however, the hydrometer can be used in determining the proper strength of a brine.

A first-class salt should be pure white in color. The Liverpool salts have a faint bluish tinge; two of the Canadian salts from the same locality have a faint reddish cast. The colors are perhaps due to the shells of animals deposited in or beside the salt brines. Enough of the red coloring matter was obtained to determine it to be due to the presence of iron. A very decided red or blue cast should condemn a salt for use. One packer gave as his experience that a dark salt colored the outside of the meat also.

A first-class salt should be: 1st, clean; 2nd, white; 3rd, comparatively dry; 4th, uniform in grain; 5th, thoroughly soluble in water; 6th, scale-like in grain for quick, and compact for slow solution.

On the whole I see no grounds for the prejudice against Canadian salts. There doubtless are some poor brands offered for sale, but there are also brands that are just as pure as the Liverpool, the only Liverpool brand that stands much ahead being partly shut out on account of the price.

Many of the leading packers of Toronto are returning to the use of Canadian salt. The only matter of doubt now is as to its use in butter. This should be given a fair and unprejudiced trial, and manufacturers should endeavor to fully meet the want in this direction by producing a salt pure in composition, fine and uniform in grain, and quick in solution.

IMPORTING INHABITANTS.

The details of the trials of the Anarchists in Chicago go to show that a volcano of organized incendiarism, in the form of anarchic, socialistic and nihilistic organizations, underlies Chicago with, no doubt, ramifications extending to other portions of the republic. The Chicago cut-throats had coolly and deliberately matured plans for a campaign against law and order, and it was only by good fortune that their fiendish scheme was not permitted to develop into frightful execution. These men are the scum of the political plot-hatcheries of the old world, and they came to America, misled by the rather spread-eagle intimation of the United States, that the broad acres of the republic offered a home to the oppressed and downtrodden of despotic Europe. The result, however, shows that our American cousins have got more than they bargained for and that the national desire to exalt republican institutions at the expense of the "old world despotisms" produces an unpleasantly abundant supply of cut-throats. The United States, now that they see that these unhung rascals are utterly bad and that they are proof against the civilising influence of "free institutions" and that, like the fabled viper they turn and sting the owner of the hearth that warmed them to life, will have more sympathy for those old and "effete monarchies," whose desire to keep down such unmitigated rascals is construed into tyrannic cruelty.

The United States have encouraged indiscriminate immigration to such an extent that the evil they are now suffering from is a result. Canada should take the hint. We want population to fill up our countless acres, but we don't want criminals, cutthroats and paupers dumped upon our shores in shiploads. Assisted immigration is a grievous mistake. The class of emigrants Canada needs, is not composed of those who cannot pay their way. It is not fair to the workingmen of this country to ask them to put their hands into their pockets and out of their scanty earnings pay taxes to import paupers to Canada and then afterwards, in the majority of cases, pay taxes to support them after they are brought here. The class of emigrants Canada requires is composed of those who have energy and self-reliance enough to come unassisted to Canada, who show a disposition and ability to fight their own way and conquer the unsettled outlying regions, and bring them to the condition of the older portions of the province. A class of emigrants like this will be a source of strength, not weakness to the country. We don't want old country artizans and mechanics unless they are willing to enter new fields and work up a business for themselves. Canadian workingmen object to being crowded out at a job by imported pauper labour, and they are not prepared to endorse or sympathize with the Dominion Government in their expenditure of about 200,000 dollars per year to assist competitors to land on our shores. If they want to plant them on the free grant lands or in Manitoba, its bad enough to tax Canadian labourers to pay the expenses of their shipment to Canada, but to import mechanics and artizans into our towns and permit them to underbid native and naturalized Canadians, is something that will not be tolerated.

Lightning Strikes a Corpse.

The Coffin Shattered and Two Watchers Killed.

OTTAWA, July 23.—At the Little Farm, back of Hull, last evening, during a heavy thunder-storm, the lightning struck a house where a number of persons were sitting up watching the body of a woman who had died. The lightning coming down the chimney and stovepipe struck the coffin and shattered it to pieces. Four persons were seated around the coffin at the time. One man said a child were seriously injured and have since died. Two others were badly injured.

The Crisis in England.

Tory Efforts to Form a Ministry Hanging Fire.

LONDON, July 26.—The Marquis of Salisbury arrived to-day from Osborne, where he went to receive the Queen's commands to form a government. Great crowds assembled at all the chief railway stations between Portsmouth and London, and tendered the new premier ovations. He declined to address the multitudes anywhere. At London an enormous crowd had assembled to welcome the Marquis, and they cheered him loudly when he alighted from the train.

Lord Salisbury has convened a meeting of the Conservative members of the House of Commons at Carlton club to morrow.

There are rumors of a hitch in the forming of the new cabinet on account of the conflicting claims of two leading ministers of the last Conservative government.

The Election Riots at Londonderry.

LONDON, July 26.—The Government declines to institute an inquiry into the conduct of the police on the occasion of the recent election in Londonderry. The Viceroy's orders summoning the inhabitants of Londonderry to deliver up their arms and ammunition before to-day has been disregarded.

Sir John Macdonald and the Methodists.

"A Methodist," writing from Halifax to the Montreal Witness, respecting the laying of the corner stone of a Methodist church at Fallowfield, N. S., by Sir John says:

I did not say anything about it at the time, but this evening at tea the fact was mentioned by one of the family, when one of my young boys said, rather abruptly, "It is a pity the Methodists of Fallowfield could not find some one of principle to lay the corner stone." And then I found that this was the opinion of all my family, both old and young, viz: that it was an inconsistent and humiliating thing that Sir John Macdonald should have been asked to lay the corner stone of a Methodist church. Now allow me to state that I have always been a Conservative, and although I have not been able for some time back consistently to say much in praise of Sir John Macdonald, I have never uttered a word against him or against getting him to lay the corner stone of one of our churches.

But I wish to state to the public some of the reasons given for this opinion, as it would seem perhaps unreasonable were I not to do so.

1. "Sir John's moral record has not been of the highest order.

2. "He has shown himself the enemy of all temperance legislation and reform, and the friend of the liquor traffic for years past. That is the enemy of Methodism and the friend of our foes.

3. "Sir John and his friends sat down on Mr. Charlton's 'Sabbath Bill,' which was framed directly in aid of the Church and religion.

4. "Sir John with a sneer and a toss of his head kicked Mr. Charlton's 'Seduction Bill,' out of the House of Commons during the session of 1885!

2. "It is well known that no Methodist need apply for any favor or place at Ottawa."

Mr. Henry, formerly of Woodstock, Ont., but now of Kansas City, has invented and patented a system of electric locomotion that is expected to be applicable, not only to street railways, but to canal boats, barges, etc., on waterways.

Farmers in this section, says the Guelph Mercury, report that the crops this year as a whole will be a very good yield. The hay has been housed in first-class condition, and quite a few have got in their barley. The fall wheat is also a good crop, and a considerable quantity of it has been cut.

Reasons why you should purchase Field Lightning in preference to all other remedies are: Rapid result—cures instantly. It is easily applied—no trouble—no lost time. There seems to be some misapprehension relative to the price of Flour. I find a number of purchasers stating that the grade of Flour known as

LOVE'S VICTORY.

BY BERTHA M CLAY

For any one to attempt to humiliate Pauline was simply a waste of time; the girl's natural character was so dignified that all attempts of the kind fell through or told most upon her assailants. She answered Lady Hampton with quiet politeness, her dark eyes hardly resting for a moment upon her.

"You do not seem to find much occupation for your leisure hours," continued Lady Hampton. "You are making the round of the grounds, I suppose? They are very beautiful. I am afraid that you must feel keenly how much my niece has deprived you of."

It was not a lady-like speech; but Lady Hampton felt irresistibly impelled to make it—the proud, defiant, beautiful face provoked her. Pauline merely smiled; she had self-control that would have done honor to one much older and more experienced.

"Your niece has deprived me of nothing, Lady Hampton," she returned, with a curl of the lip, for which the elder lady could have shaken her. "I possess one great advantage of which no one living can deprive me—that is, the Darrell blood runs in my veins."

And, with a bow, she walked away leaving her ladyship more angry than she would have cared to own. So Pauline met all her enemies. Whatever she might suffer, they should not triumph over her. Even Sir Oswald felt himself compelled to yield to her an admiration that he had never given before.

[illegible] the evening of [illegible] face. The western sunbeams, lingering on the grand old [illegible] brightened it into beauty. Flowers [illegible] and shrubs were all in their fullest [illegible]. Presently Sir Oswald, leaning [illegible] the balustrade of the terrace, saw Pauline [illegible] sketching in the grounds below. He [illegible] her, and looked over her shoulder. She was just completing a sketch of the great [illegible] towers of the Court; and he was struck with the [illegible] beauty of the [illegible].

"[illegible] Darrell Court in Pauline?" he said, gently.

She raised her face [illegible] for a minute the [illegible] between them was forgotten. She only remembered that he was [illegible] Darrell, and [illegible] near of kin.

"I do love it, uncle," she [illegible] "as all true hearts love their favorite shrine. [illegible] home of beauty, of romance, the cradle of heroes; every stone is [illegible] with legend. Love is a weak word for [illegible] that I feel."

He looked at the glowing face, and for a few moments a doubt crossed him as to whether he had done right in depriving this true Darrell of her inheritance.

"But, Pauline," he said, slowly, "you would never have——"

She sprang from her seat with a quickness that almost startled him. She had forgotten all that had happened; but now it all returned to her with a bitter pang that could not be controlled.

"Hush, Sir Oswald!" she cried, interrupting him. "It is too late for me to talk about Darrell Court now. Pray do not misunderstand me; I was only expressing my belief."

She bent down to take up her drawing materials.

"I do not misunderstand you, child," he said, sadly. "You love it because it is the home of a race you love and not for its mere worth in money."

Her dark eyes seemed to flash with fire; the glorious face had never softened so before.

"You speak truly," she said; "that is exactly what I mean."

Then she went away, liking Sir Oswald better than she had ever liked him in her life before. He looked after her half sadly.

"A glorious girl!" he said to himself; "a true Darrell! I hope I have not made a mistake."

Lady Darrell made no complaint to her husband of Pauline; the girl gave her no tangible cause of complaint. She could not complain to Sir Oswald that Pauline's eyes always rested on her with a scornful glance, half-humorous, half-mocking. She could not complain of that strange power Miss Darrell exercised of making her always feel so small." She would gladly have made friends with Miss Darrell: she had no idea of keeping up any species of warfare; but Pauline resisted all her advances. Lady Darrell had a strange kind of half-fear, which made her ever anxious to conciliate.

She remarked to herself how firm and steadfast Pauline was; there was no weakness, no cowardice in her character; she was strong, self-reliant; and, discerning that, Lady Darrell asked herself often, "What will Pauline's vengeance be?"

The question puzzled her, far more than she would have cared to own. What shape could her vengeance assume? What could she do to avoid it? When would it overtake her?

Then she would laugh at herself. What had there to fear in the wilfully-altered, dramatic threats of a helpless girl? Could she take her husband from her? No; it was not in any human power to do that. Could she take her wealth, title, position, from her? No; that was impossible. Could she make her unhappy? No, again; that did not seem to be in her power. Lady Darrell would try to laugh, but one look at the beautiful proud face, with its dark, proud eyes and firm lips, would bring the coward fear back again.

She tried her best to conciliate her. She was always putting little pleasures, little amusements, in her way, of which Pauline never availed herself. She was always urging Sir Oswald to make her some presents or to grant her some indulgence. She never interfered with her; even when suggestions from her would have been useful, she never made them. She was mistress of the house, but she allowed the utmost freedom and liberty to this girl, who never thanked her, and who never asked her for a single favor.

Sir Oswald admired this grace and sweet tact. He saw that his wife did her best to conciliate the girl, that she was always kind and gracious to her. He saw, also, that Pauline never responded; that nothing ever moved her from her proud, distant attitude she had assumed.

He [illegible] only hope; in time things would [illegible] he would caress[illegible] ing ways a[illegible] win Pauline over, and then they would be good friends.

[illegible] the edge of the dark precipice was for a time covered with flowers.

The autumn and winter passed away, spring-tide opened fair and beautiful, and Miss Hastings watched her pupil with daily increasing [illegible]. Pauline never spoke of her [illegible] as though it had never happened; her pride never once giving way; but, for all that, the governess saw that her whole character and disposition was becoming warped. She watched Pauline in fear. If circumstances had been propitious to her, if Sir Oswald would have but trusted her, would but have had more patience with her, would but have waited the sure result of a little more knowledge and experience, she would have developed into [illegible] woman. she would [illegible] of the grandest Darrells that ever reigned at the old Court. But Sir Oswald had not trusted her; he had not been willing to wait the result of patient training; he had been impetuous and hasty, and, though Pauline was too proud to complain, she felt [illegible] and [illegible] deeper and more concentrated because she made no sign.

This girl, noble of soul, proud of nature, sensitive, [illegible] and [illegible], gave her whole life to one idea—her disappointment and the vengeance due it: the very grandeur of her virtues helped to intensify her faults; the very strength of her character seemed to deepen and darken the idea over which she brooded incessantly by night and by day. She was bent on vengeance.

CHAPTER XXVI.

SIR OSWALD'S DOUBTS.

It was the close of a spring day. Lady Hampton had been spending it at Darrell Court, and General Deering, an old friend of Sir Oswald's, who was visiting in the neighborhood, had joined the party at dinner. When dinner was over, and the golden sunbeams were still brightening the beautiful room, he [illegible] to see the pictures in the picture gallery.

"You have a fine collection," he said—every one tells me that; but it is not only the pictures I want to see, but the Darrell faces. I heard the other day that the Darrells were generally acknowledged to be the handsomest race in [illegible]."

The proud, fair face flushed [illegible].

"I hope England values us for something more useful than merely handsome faces," he rejoined, with a touch of hauteur that made the general smile.

"Certainly," he hastened to say; "but in a race, where personal beauty is said to be on the decrease, it is something to own a handsome face."

The picture gallery was very extensive and [illegible] and well lighted, the floor was covered with rich crimson cloth, white statues gleamed from amid crimson velvet hangings, the walls were covered with rare and valuable pictures. But General Deering saw a picture that day in the gallery which he [illegible] to forget.

Lady Hampton was not enthusiastic about art unless there was something to be gained by it. There was nothing to excite her cupidity now, her last [illegible] having married so her ladyship could afford to take matters calmly; she reclined at her ease on one of the crimson lounges, and enjoyed the luxury of a quiet nap.
